BULK RATE U.S. POSTAGE PAID CARMEL, CA Permit No. 149

OUR 69TH YEAR, NO. 52 — December 29, 1983

1983: The year in review

A look at the significant people, issues, and events that made news in the Carmel-Carmel Valley area during the past year.

The year-end wrap-up begins on page 7.

Carmel River erosion causes anger, confusion

By JOE LIVERNOIS

FAITH AND TRUST in the political system is eroding among Carmel Valley residents near Boronda Bridge about as swiftly as their property.

A Corps of Engineers project to stabilize the southern abutment to Boronda Bridge over Carmel River continues to infuriate neighbors on Boronda and Garzas roads.

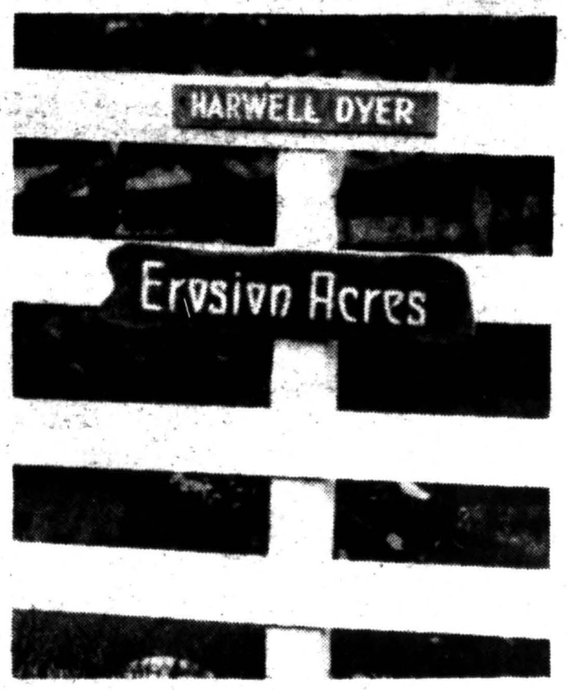
The project also apparently has frustrated the Monterey County Public Works Department, the agency liable for work at the bridge site.

The $77,000 riprap project is designed to restabilize the abutment to the bridge by dumping riprap along the bank of the river near the bridge. The Corps had finished a similar project in 1980, but the riprap washed away in subsequent rainstorms.

Though the work the Corps has performed this month is essentially the same as it was three years ago, the Corps has used grouted riprap and larger boulders so the project will not also wash away.

But neighbors have been skeptical. And recent events have them angry.

Four neighbors secured a Monterey County Superior Court temporary restraining order Dec. 21 to stop work on the project. The four complained that their property was used by the Corps' contractors to move equipment in and out of the river channel without their permission.



THE DYER FAMILY on Boronda Road has watched its property erode for the past several years — to the point that they have named their property "Erosion Acres." On Christmas Day, the Dyers lost more property and four trees, as high water washed away banks in which protective materials had been removed earlier this month.

When the restraining order was issued, a diversion had been built by the Corps contractors in the river bed that diverted the flow of the river north of the abutment. Property owners who sought the restraining order argued that the river should not flow directly onto the bridge abutment, as it has in recent years.

On the other hand, the newly-diverted river brushed up against the northern riverbank across the river from the abutment and threatened property adjacent to a home owned by Phyllis Dyer.

IN RESPONSE to continued complaints from residents in the area, Don Wilson, maintenance engineer for the county public works department, met with about two dozen neighbors Dec. 23.

Neighbors in the area have argued that a portion of a sandbar several hundred feet upstream should be removed so the river can flow straight through the channel in the bridge area.

Last winter, high river water bounced back and forth between the southern and northern banks near the river and took substantial acreage with it. By removal of the sandbar, the neighbors said, the river would flow straight through the river channel under the bridge.

Gary Page, the newly-hired engineer for the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District Carmel River Management Zone, told Wilson he believes the next big rainstorm probably would wash away some of Mrs. Dyer's property if the river flow was not diverted.

Wilson told the group he would ask Corps officials to remove the sandbar upstream. He stressed, however, that while the public works department is "liable" for the project, ultimate authority for the project rests with the Corps of Engineers.

"Everyone assumes I'm in the driver's seat out there," he told the Carmel Pine Cone/-Carmel Valley Outlook earlier this week. "I'm one agency removed from it."

In fact, Wilson said he was not even able to contact anyone in authority at the Corps of Engineers to transmit his recommendation to straighten the river channel Friday afternoon.

And when the skies opened Christmas Day, the river ate away Mrs. Dyer's property just as Page anticipated.

So Wilson and his public works employees were out on the banks of the river in heavy

Lack of leadership?

Dear Editor:

The Pine Cone editorial on Dec. 22 dealt with "lack of leadership" in the city council on the part of Mayor Townsend, and quoted Councilman Maradei as indicating that the "long delays in the development of a library annex" were related to this "lack of leadership." This is a serious distortion of what actually happened.

As president of the library board of trustees, I was involved in the development of the library annex plans and acutely aware of how everything was thrown into confusion when Councilman Maradei joined with two other council members to suspend action on the underground parking below the library annex, thus forcing the library board of trustees to suspend its plans which were almost ready for the constitution stage.

This council group proposed instead a large parking structure at Sunset, for which the city would have to borrow money, with a new library on top, for which the library board did not have the money. Mayor Townsend opposed this project, and was vindicated when the voters of Carmel defeated it by a large majority.

During this difficult period, the mayor was always well-informed, fair, and understanding of the library's true needs. There was never any question in my mind of the mayor's leadership. The question was of the soundness of Councilman Maradei's judgment in thwarting her policy and the policy of the library board regarding the library annex.

Karin for supervisor

Dear Editor:

I was very pleased to read that Karin Strasser-Kauffman is considering running for supervisor. Karin has served our community well in many different roles. She is a true public servant in the best and fullest meaning of that term.

Karin Strasser-Kauffman knows and is responsive to the needs and concerns of our community. We can trust her on the land use issues that are so critical to our future. She also has the breadth of experience and knowledge to handle the many other important issues facing our county government.

Karin Strasser-Kauffman has the energy, organizational ability, and political savvy to be a winner. She would be an outstanding supervisor. I hope we can convince her to run.

'An absolute gem'

Dear Editor:

The piece Michael Gardner wrote on the saga of Carmel second kitchens was an absolute gem!

The whole concept of having the dreary script likened to a soap opera was hilarious and right on target. Humor, as I'm sure you know, can more often than not make points that treating the subject seriously cannot. You did a superb job.

What our town needs is more humor. Pieces like, "As The Second Kitchen Turns," are a grand beginning. If the city council takes note, a bit of fresh air might infiltrate their deliberations — although I don't hold out much hope for "bad guy" Stephenson.

But just think of all the other areas that are open to humorous attack: bulky two-story houses on single 40-by-100 foot lots; "Woodsman, spare that tree — even if it's on my own lot and I can't build unless I cut it down;" the attempt to curtail home vacation rental unless it is for at least 30 days; Piccadilly Park; the library; creation of a monstrous underground parking area at Sunset Center.

So, don't stop. We need the kind of humor you can bring to whatever goes on in the city council and planning commission. We have never had it before, so please don't stop now.

No flood insurance?

Dear Editor:

If the FEMA program for flood insurance were cut out, a lot of homes and property owners would be up a creek.

What would happen to the value of "uninsured" homes along the river? What about places like The Crossroads or Carmel Hacienda who came ever so close (12 inches) to being wiped out last winter? Just our basement got flooded last year to the tune of $25,000. All covered by insurance.

What about main residences and businesses? $35,000 would hardly dent what it would take to repair an entire home. By the way, the personal property coverage is only $10,000 currently.

Maybe riverfront owners should find out how close they were to becoming flooded last year. A couple of "big" storms missed us at crucial times and saved Brookdale homes, Carmel Hacienda, The Crossroads, Quail Lodge and Mission Fields. A compromise had better be made, or we may not have to worry about any property along the Carmel River.

Sunset park/parking

Dear Editor:

Please don't reduce the size of the proposed badly needed landscaped park on top of the multi-level parking garage on the north end of Sunset Center by building on it.

It should contain a baseball diamond, a basketball court, a frisbee or croquet area or any activity the recreation commission feels suitable for all ages, as well as an area to sit and relax in the sun.

A sunken pool with portions set aside for therapeutic services and young children should be built at the south end in cooperation with the Cypress Swim Club. A larger gym beneath or above it would eliminate the noise that bothers other activities taking place at Sunset.

The city council chambers might better be built on top of the public works complex next to the police station as originally planned. Sale of the old church could probably finance this.

County 'very clever'

Dear Editor:

Very clever, the county. They figure if they keep the Valley road all mucked up, month after month, we who must use the road will welcome the Hatton Canyon Freeway by and by.

I wrote years ago that I believed the Carmel Valley Road was used as a training ground for the county. By the way, who among you slows as they pass the slide area?

Ho, ho, ho!

Reflections on the old year and a perspective on the new

By ROBERT MISKIMON

THE PASSAGE of an old year and the arrival of a new one generally leads to all sorts of altered states of awareness.

Some of these altered states are chemically induced, while others just seem to occur naturally as we frail humans try to sort out some rather aggravating existential dilemmas.

One question which always comes to my mind at the end of the old year and the arrival of the new: did time exist before man invented it? What did cave men do, for instance, to whoop it up on new year's eve? Did they have a new year's eve at the Flintstone Hilton complete with dinosaur soup and pterodactyl steaks?

I, for one, have never really understood all the excitement and hysteria that typically surrounds new year's eve. Almost to a person, new year's celebrants wish away the old year and all the ills it has brought while they welcome with open arms the new year. Then the cycle is repeated the following new year's eve. Doesn't anyone ever learn?

1983 has been, at best, a mixed year for local residents. Carmel lost most of its beach to violent winter storms and will spend some $500,000 to attempt to buttress and repair that damage even as new storms arrive. The Carmel River continued its corrosive path through Carmel Valley, and took more Valley property with it.

A fair portion of the mountainside south of Carmel was lost in a massive slide which closed Highway 1 during 1983, and that repair project — like the Carmel beach restoration — is not expected to be complete until 1984.

A new Carmel Valley Master Plan has been drafted but will not be approved by county supervisors until 1984. Critics have charged that it is a mere rubber stamp of the 1980 plan which was invalidated by court order; projected development limits remain the same despite completion of the court-ordered environmental impact report.

Coastal plans for the Carmel area and Del Monte Forest are all but complete. The Big Sur plan is still logjammed by an unwieldy and probably unworkable transfer of density credit scheme. All of these issues, however, should be resolved in 1984.

In 1983, Carmelites finally gave clear direction to the wishy-washy city council to proceed with completion of the Piccadilly Park and not to use the existing Harrison Memorial Library as new city hall headquarters. Voters also expressed disapproval of a plan for a parking facility at Sunset Center. Further action on these projects, too, will not come until 1984.

Carmel Unified School District students performed well on standardized achievement tests administered statewide, despite the fears of an alarming number of parents who have chosen to enroll their children in local private schools. The back-to-basics movement, now firmly implanted in state government, started long ago in Carmel schools but will progress even further in 1984.

Carmel now has completed the tortuous process of update and revision of its 1973 General Plan, the document which is to guide land use in the village for at least the next decade. Its implementation in 1984 may provide as much controversy as stability in city affairs.

MOST OF US can think of quite a few reasons why we are glad that "1983" (that arbitrary period of time which exists only in our minds) has come to an end, and an equal number of reasons to hope that 1984 will somehow be a better year.

As far as the Orwellian prophecy for 1984 is concerned, much of that already came to pass before 1984. The age of computers and television already has placed a video screen in practically every home, as George Orwell envisioned in his futuristic 1984.

Just listen to any politician for evidence that double-think is already a part of our humanscape. Ask Ronald Reagan or any of his military advisors whether "War is peace," as Orwell foresaw.

In many ways, 1984 will have to be better than 1983. It's hard to see how it could be much worse.

Personally, 1983 has been a landmark in my life. Having lost my 15-year-old daughter in a freak boating accident in August, then my father 12 days later following open heart surgery, many of my concepts about life have been radically altered.

I have come to believe there is nothing so important as today, the moment, for that is all we have. We can no more live in the future than we can re-live the past. Don't put off telling someone that you love them; you may never see them again.

Human life is immensely more fragile than we care to acknowledge. In the long run, the only thing that matters is whether we have exercised to the fullest our capacities to learn and to love.

And there is still beauty in the world, if we can but look beyond human weaknesses — including our own — and glimpse the majesty of the infinite order of the universe.

My new year's resolution? Not to deal with "1984" but to live in the today, to be aware of small moments, hidden beauty, and the capacity for love in each human being. And to treasure each day.

Trustees tour 'terrible' high school gymnasium

By MICHAEL GARDNER

CARMEL HIGH School Principal Marsha Kading-Kelly must have felt like an Army general subjected to an inspection from visiting Washington D.C. brass when the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education took advantage of the Christmas holiday break to tour the campus Dec. 19.

The tour included a visit to the boys' locker room, which an obviously disturbed school board greeted by such comments as "disgusting" and "terrible."

The purpose of the early morning white-glove inspection was to give trustees a ringside seat to the many campus maintenance problems and proposed solutions listed in an 18-page report prepared by architects Fred Keeble and George Rhoda.

TRUSTEE DOYLE Clayton jotted down some notes while standing on the theater stage at Carmel High School.

Trustees will now ponder the report concerning the renovation of the more than 40-years-old campus before a study session at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday, Jan. 11 in the high school library.

There are two major decisions that confront trustees: just how much money to spend on renovation and where to put the limited resources.

The architect is expected to present trustees with a grandiose shoot-for-the-stars plan and then have it trimmed from there, explained Chris Keeble, who represented the firm at the tour.

The object of a more extensive plan rather than a scaled down version is to get the proposal through the state architecture office all at once rather than having to keep submitting drawings, Keeble explained. (The state must approve any major renovation work at school facilities.)

"Then, when we see what we have money-wise, we'll go from there," he said.

The district has budgeted a little more than $700,000 for the high school renovation project. The money was generated from the sale of Carmel Woods Elementary School.

During the Dec. 19 tour trustees were told of areas which are a high priority and other less timely projects that would be nice but are not immediately necessary.

Principal Marsha Kading-Kelly acted as a tour guide for the group, which included Keeble and district Supt. Bill Rand. Board President Robert Fenton, and Trustees Susan Bromfield, Doyle Clayton and Pat Condren also were present. Trustee Joan Cathey was absent.

Mrs. Kading-Kelly first toured the administration wing where most of the projects are a low priority and are considered "cosmetic."

'I DON'T even know how old the floor is. It (repairs) has a lot to do with the climate and pride as most cosmetic things do," said Mrs. Kading-Kelly.

The low ceiling also is in poor condition, weary of students through the years punching holes in it, she said.

"This is a low priority. I don't see it going in the first round (of repairs)," Rand pointed out.

Outside on the way to the theater the group stopped along the walkway, which is uneven, has holes in it and is in desperate need of resurfacing. The architect proposes to use a black coating on the sidewalks to level them out and make the passageways more attractive.

Mrs. Kading-Kelly added at this juncture that the new drainage pipes installed near the administration building are "working fine" after last year when "we had the water lapping at the doors."

Inside the theater trustees appeared astonished that the students are able to perform in such a poor facility.

"It is incredible that they can put on shows in what they have here," Mrs. Condren said.

The theater, which is in Room 2, doubles as an English classroom and at one time was the site of school board meetings. Trustees now meet in the more modern and pleasant Carmel Middle School library.

For the theater, the architect proposes to upgrade the electrical system, add a sink, repair the seats, install new carpet, repair the backstage steps and add fire sprinklers backstage,

On the way to the gym, trustees stopped at the "senior steps" so dubbed because at one time the seniors used to claim the area as their own.

Near the steps a garbage can filled with water is sunk in the mud. Mrs. Kading-Kelly jokingly called it a "duck pond." Trustees suggested that the area be cemented and a bench added.

Trustees received perhaps their most rude awakening inside the boys' locker room in the gym.

There the walls and floors are chipped and cement pokes through. The walls have what appears to be coffee stains on them and scrawled across one side is a common obscenity.

TRUSTEES SURVEYED the gym during a Dec. 19 tour of the Carmel High School campus, which may receive a $700,000 facelift.

"I think it looks just terrible," said Clayton, who pointed to the roof of a small enclosed room. On top of the roof were several towels and moldy pieces of sandwiches.

"Disgusting" was the blunt summation supplied by Mrs. Bromfield.

AFTER ABOUT 10 minutes, Fenton summed up trustees' sentiments by saying: "I can't stand it any more. It's too depressing. Next."

The architect proposes a complete overhaul of the locker room, including new floors and new paint on the walls.

Inside the gym, coach Bob Schwarz was putting his frosh-soph basketball team through its morning drill. Trustees watched as Keeble explained the need to resurface the decade-old floor.

"Any floor you get in a gym that lasts 10 years is a good deal," said Keeble, who estimated cost of the resurfacing at about $9,000.

After questioning from Clayton, Keeble said the floor is safe and there is nothing structurally wrong with the floor base.

The girls' locker room is in much better condition, although both facilities were redone at the same time 10 years ago.

The cafeteria is another major facility suggested for a complete renovation.

The architect recommends that trustees open a food service line and redo one small adjacent room for use as a cafeteria.

Currently, students must eat in classrooms or outside because the room is not used as a cafeteria.

The larger former cafeteria is now used as a physical education classroom. If it is converted to a cafeteria, the school would lose its use as a class for two periods because of the time needed to set up the dining tables and then clean after lunch, Mrs. Kading-Kelly explained.

Trustees then visited several of the classrooms, including Room 24 (biology) that is dubbed "the sloping room" because of a warped floor.

The report prepared by Keeble and Rhoda lists a myraid of improvements for just about every room on the campus.

Most of the work involves roof replacement, electrical system upgrading, new paint jobs and new carpets.

The architect also recommends that trustees okay a complete exterior paint job for all of the campus buildings.

Council directs a study of limited recreation program

A LIMITED city-wide summer recreation program has just one more hurdle to clear before it becomes a reality.

The Carmel City Council Dec. 20 unanimously directed city staff to prepare a proposal for a limited pay-as-you-go summer recreation program to include the employment of a part-time coordinator.

That report is to be presented this spring to the council for final approval, which would be the final step before creation of a city-offered summer recreation program that has been discussed for several years but never implemented.

Meanwhile, the council-appointed recreation committee is to meet Jan. 5 to prepare a final report on its recommendations for summer activities and a final proposal for a comprehensive recreation program if the summer session is successful.

The committee report is expected to be presented to the planning commission in either January or February.

The council has allocated $21,000 in the 1983-84 municipal budget to help start a program.

In other action Dec. 20, the council approved a request by Councilman David Maradei to direct the planning commission to investigate whether the city needs an apartment conversion ordinance.

Maradei is concerned that the city cannot prohibit conversion of apartments in the C-1-S (commercial-service) zone to motels and hotels. New motels and hotels currently are prohibited in the residential zone.

He believes the city needs to take steps to ensure that existing housing is not eliminated.

The council also rejected a proposal by Councilwoman Arnold to install benches along Ocean Avenue.

The council is fearful that the bench will create safety problems because pedestrians would jaywalk across Ocean Avenue to sit on the benches. In addition, the visitors would litter the area after they eat there, a majority of the council said.

In other action, the council approved a one month extension of the contract for City Atty. George Brehmer.

The extension was granted to give the council an opportunity to do background checks on the five finalists for Brehmer's job. A new city attorney is expected to be named by the council at its meeting of either Jan. 3 or Jan. 17.

There were 35 applicants for the position. A special committee screened the applications and then conducted personal interviews in mid-December.

Brehmer announced his resignation earlier this year. However he agreed to continue on the job until a successor is appointed by the council.

GORDON ANDREWS is to present to the city council in January a scaled-down version of his previously-proposed $135,000 Piccadilly Park landscaping plan.

Piccadilly Park landscaping to go to council in January

By MICHAEL GARDNER

PICCADILLY Park, having survived numerous attempts to halt its development, appears almost ready for a spring planting.

The Carmel City Council next month is to hear a report on a scaled-down approximately $75,000 landscaping plan for the park.

Because of the holidays it is uncertain whether the landscaping report is to be presented to the council at its Jan. 3 or Jan. 17 sesssion. City Administrator Douglas Schmitz wants to meet with landscape architect Gordon Andrews of Santa Cruz before the council session.

That previously-proposed $135,000 landscaping plan plus the nearly $400,000 purchase price almost cost Piccadilly Park its chance to grow from a vacant lot to a flower-laden 4,000 sq. ft. showcase on the west side of Dolores Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues.

The final roadblock to the development of Piccadilly was eliminated Nov. 8 when voters rejected by 816 to 743 a binding measure that would have required the city council to sell the lot.

Previously the council squabbled over whether to buy the lot. The city in 1981 officially purchased the property after voters in 1979 approved acquisition of the property.

If the council approves of his scaled-down version, Andrews expects work can begin by this spring, he told the Carmel Pine Cone/-Carmel Valley Outlook Dec. 20.

Since the November election Andrews has studied his original plan to develop ways to reduce the landscaping costs to about $75,000. The council has allocated $75,000 in the 1983-84 municipal budget for development of the park.

Development costs could be cut by nearly $45,000 if the council approves of his plan to eliminate a retaining wall, reduce the esthetic lighting system and redesign a fountain, Andrews said.

The retaining wall on the west end of the lot that abuts Bonny Mead Court had been a roadblock to park development for several months.

City Atty. George Brehmer negotiated with the owners a compromise that would have required the city to construct a retaining wall to protect the Bonny Mead Court buildings from storm water runoff.

But now Andrews proposes that the city eliminate the retaining wall to save nearly $20,000.

LATER, CITY Administrator Doug Schmitz explained that the city can eliminate the retaining wall and still provide protection for the adjacent buildings.

The city could construct a grapestake-style fence on the west side. Dirt would then be pushed against the fence and ground cover planted to form a natural barrier, Schmitz suggested.

The revised landscaping plans also will reduce the anticipated amount of storm water runoff, Andrews said.

In his earlier version, Andrews proposed that the ground slope be altered to provide a more esthetic and varied terrain. By eliminating the change in the terrain, a large retaining wall is not as necessary, he said.

Another $21,000 savings could be accomplished if the council okays a redesign of the fountain and pool area in the center of the park.

Andrews proposes that the fountain be eliminated and a more natural-style pool with lily pads be developed.

Reduction of an extensive lighting system would save the city another approximately $10,000, Andrews said.

The original plan included a lighting system that would have generated a more "esthetic effect" and allow for the park to remain open in the early evening hours. Now Andrews proposes that the city install only safety lighting and the conduits for additional lighting if more funds become available later.

Andrews does not plan to propose that city workers or community volunteers landscape the park, although that would save some money. He believes the landscaping should be performed by a licensed professional contractor.

"It's true they could save some money. But even buying the plants is quite a process. You have to know what's available where," he said.

Andrews does plan to develop a maintenance manual for the park to assist the city in the upkeep of the park.

Shriners to take Carmel youngsters to big game

THANKS TO the generosity of the Monterey Peninsula Shriners Club, 200 Carmel-area youngsters and their families will be able to attend the 59th annual Shrine College East-West All-Star contest to be played at noon Jan. 7 at Stanford University in Palo Alto.

The Shriners, a branch of the Masons, has donated the 200 tickets to the Carmel Youth Baseball League, which is now distributing the passes for end zone seats. Tickets are free, but are limited to four per family.

Admission includes a contest that will feature Heisman Trophy winner Mike Rozier of Nebraska, plus the 10:30 a.m. pre-game activities and the Scottish Highlands Festival halftime show.

Also scheduled to play in the contest is local favorite Ron Rivera, who lived in Marina and played at Seaside High School. Rivera now is a senior at the University of California at Berkeley.

The nationally-televised contest is an annual event to raise funds for the the 21 Shriners' crippled children's hospitals and four burn centers.

The hospitals are for children whose physical handicaps can be helped through surgery or with the addition of artifical limbs.

The medical care is offered free to all children regardless of income level, race, creed or color. The closest hospital is in San Francisco where the Shriners operate a 39-bed facility and has over 2,000 out-patients, according to Bill Hyler of Pebble Beach, a longtime Shriner.

"There is a constant problem in getting the beds filled because people think they don't have enough money or don't know who to ask," Hyler said. "Anyone can always ask a Shriner or a Mason."

Hyler added that if anyone has a child that needs help to call him at 624-4456.

Net proceeds from last year's game plus television rights netted the Shriners about $275,000, Hyler said.

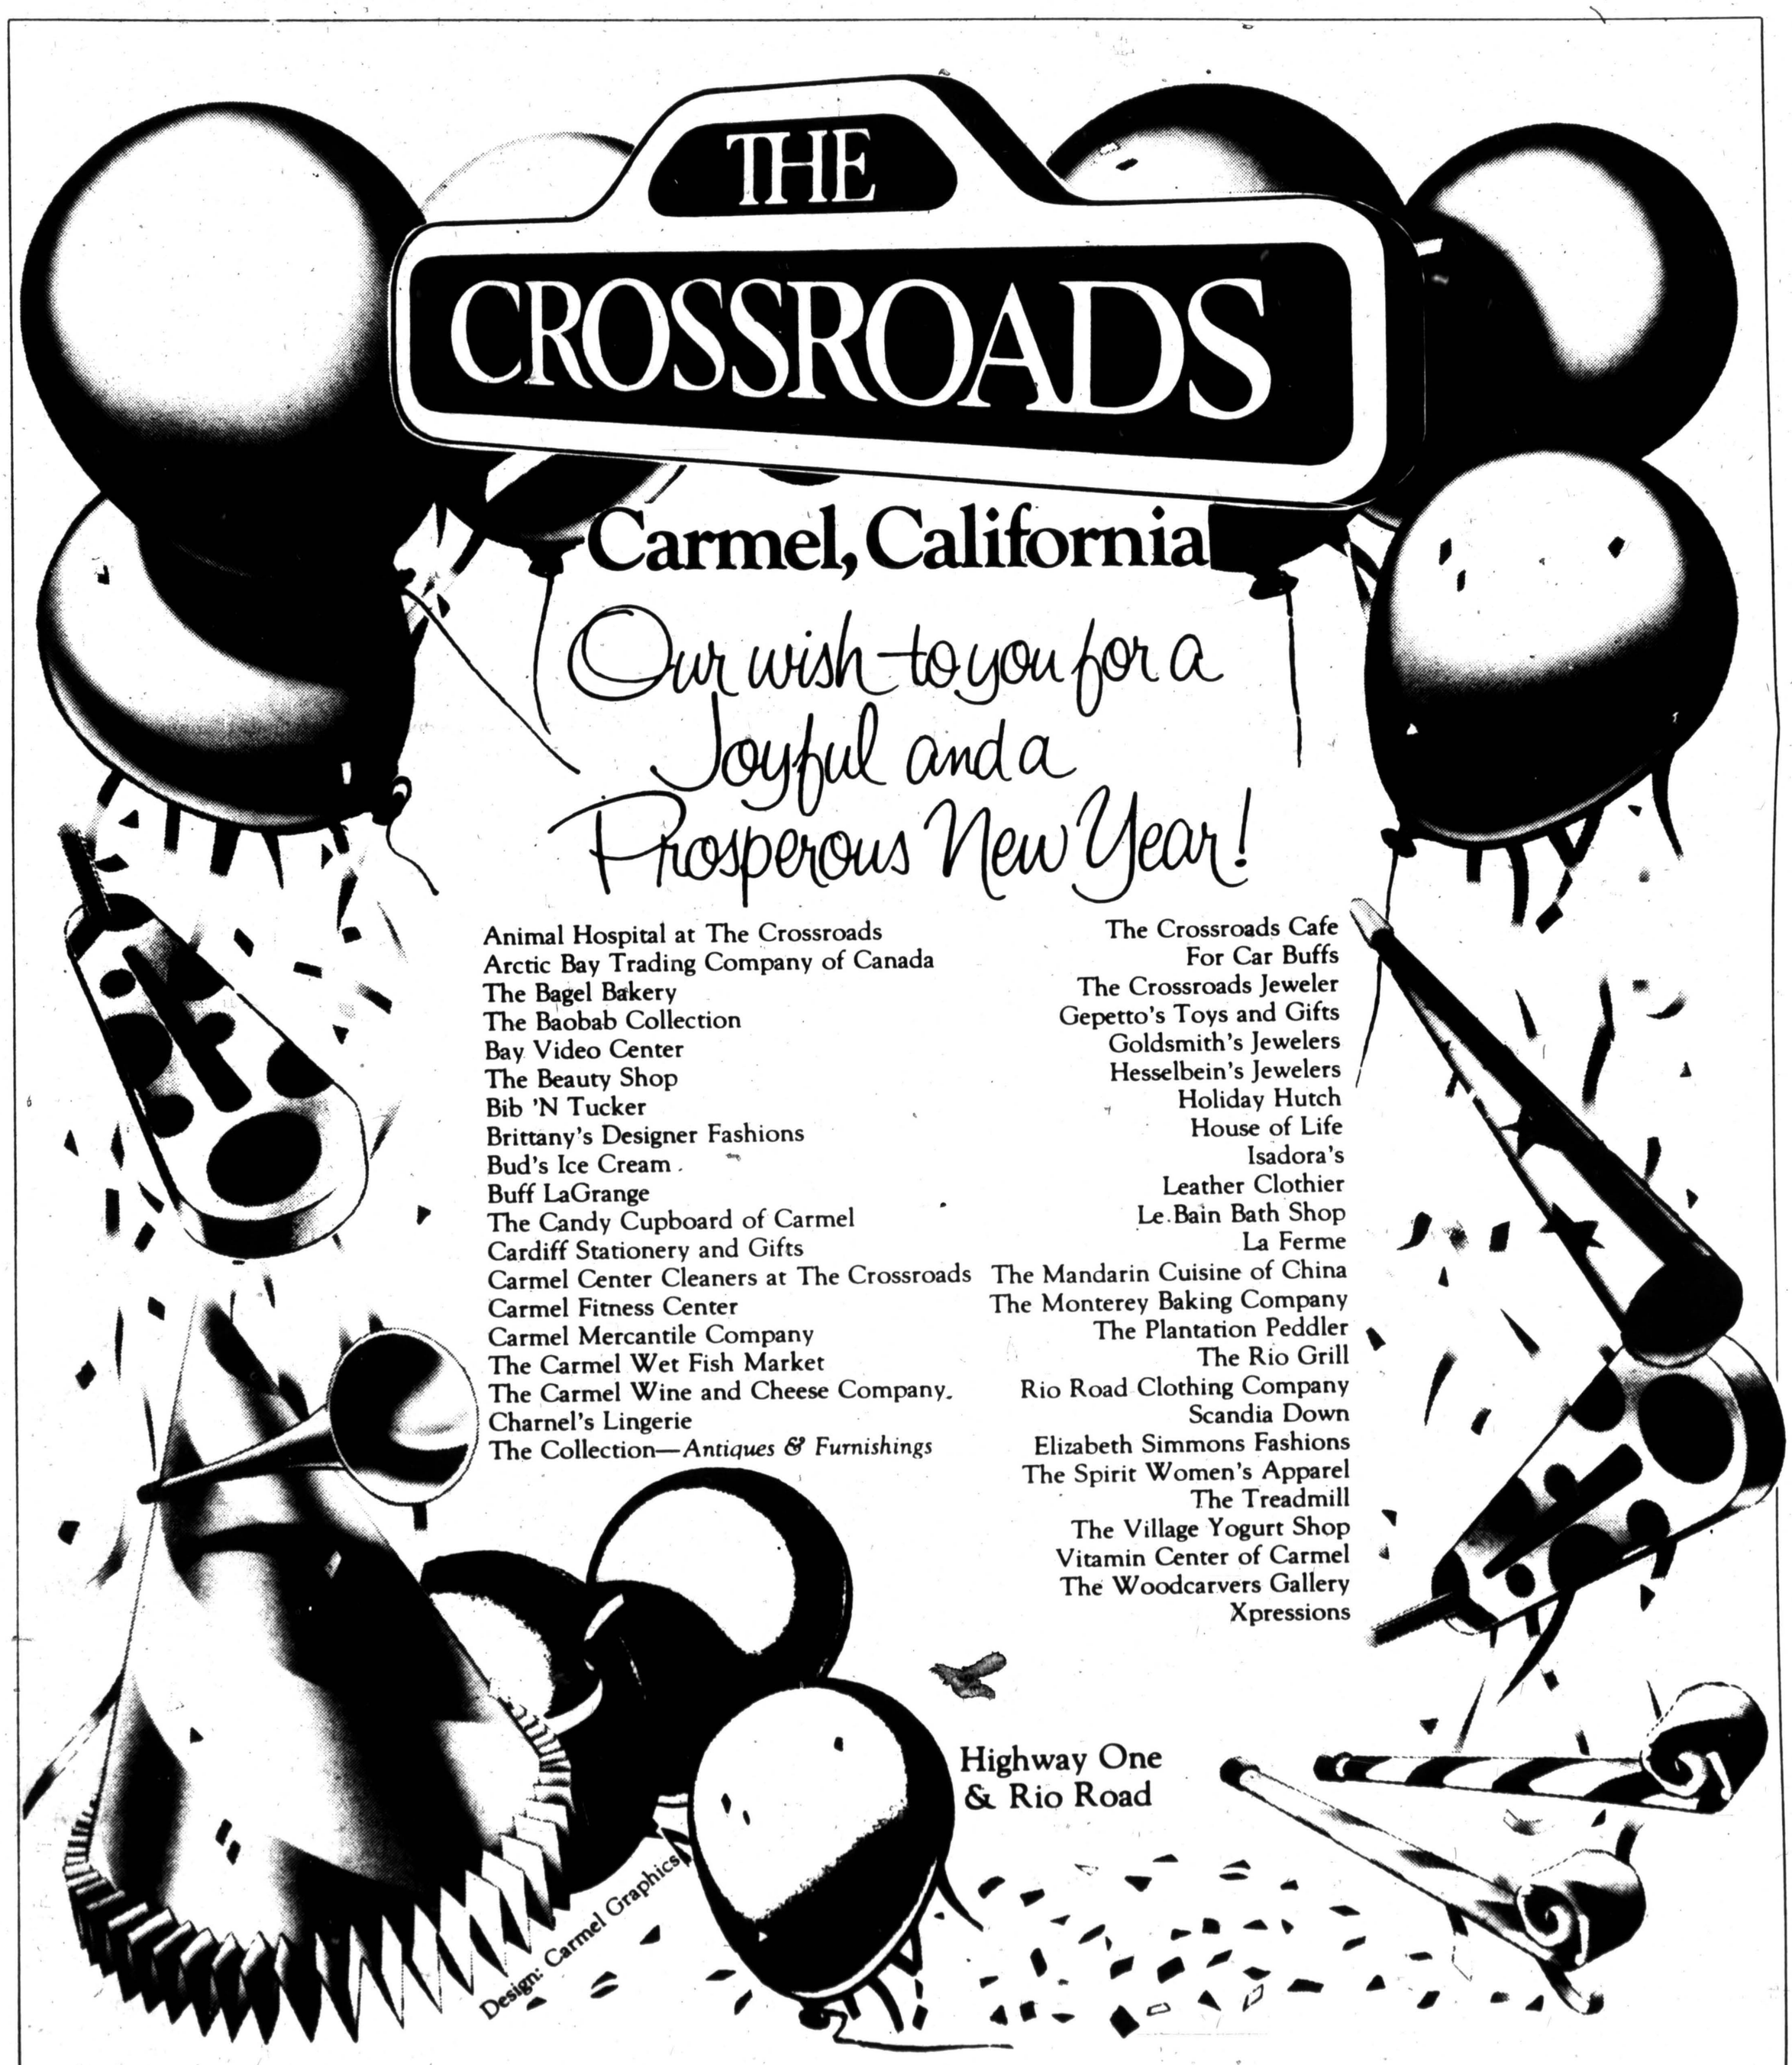
Switched headlines produce high anxiety

CARMEL politics can be confusing enough without a little extra help from misplaced headlines, such as occured in last week's Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook.

Our story which appeared on page A-4 of the Dec. 22 edition under the headline, "Carmel motel project hits city bureaucratic snafu," actually belonged with a headline, "Cottage row will rise in place of gas station," which appeared over a story on page A-15.

And vice versa.

We regret any confusion the misplaced headlines may have caused our readers.



Odello land may be dropped from CV plan

THE ODELLO family has been handed another major setback in its decade-old attempt to develop the artichoke field on the east side of Highway 1 about one mile south of Carmel.

Monterey County Superior Court Judge Richard Silver, in a notice of intended decision released last week, ruled that "the development of the Odello property has a potential for serious impacts on the Carmel Valley Master Plan area."

Silver ruled that the Odello property must be included in the proposed revised Carmel Valley Master Plan because of the "drastic consequences" development could have for the area. The ruling came in response to a petition to the court by the Odellos and other property owners to have their lands excluded from the Valley master plan.

However, in the same notice of intended decision Silver allowed the area known as High Meadows to be excluded from the master plan.

Silver noted that development of the High Meadows property "will have no significant environmental impact on Carmel Valley." High Meadows is an area on the east side of Highway 1 roughly between Carpenter Street and Ocean Avenue.

High Meadows also is excluded because the properties are "already bounded by extensive development and their development would essentially be infill," the judge wrote.

Property affected by the ruling includes parcels owned by the Mahroom family, Danny Garcia and the High Meadows II subdivision.

A JUNKED CAR lay near an equally-battered tree in the High Meadows area just east of Highway 1 roughly between Carpenter Street and Ocean Avenue. Monterey County Superior Court Judge Richard Silver has ruled that the High Meadows area is not subject to the Carmel Valley Master Plan. The action is expected to lead to development of the area. (Michael Gardner photo.)

Silver's ruling is the result of appeals filed by the High Meadows II property owners and the Odello family, who believe their land should be excluded from the revised Carmel Valley Master Plan.

The Odellos argued that their property already is included in the Carmel Area Local Coastal Program and thus should not be subject to controls in the proposed revised master plan, which is to be discussed by the Monterey County Planning Commission next month. (See related story, this issue.)

The proposed master plan restrictions on new development concern the Odellos, who have been allowed by the local coastal program to develop a 162-unit subdivision on their property.

The proposed revised master plan sets a limit of 2,500 new housing units in the area. Inclusion in the master plan means that the 162 units on the Odello property would be considered as part of the 2,500 limit.

BECAUSE High Meadows has been excluded, the proposed 169 housing units for the area will not be subject to the more restrictive master plan.

This, Mrs. Odello claims, is unfair.

"Every reason Judge Silver excluded the other properties, those reasons are valid for excluding us. I don't think it's just," Mrs. Odello told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook Dec. 23.

Mrs. Odello obviously was distraught by the decision. "I really don't want to talk about it. I don't have much to say. I'm not happy."

The property owners had to go to court to have the land excluded from the master plan because of a moratorium on discretionary use permits ordered by Judge Silver and subsequently upheld in higher courts.

Silver ordered the moratorium after the city of Carmel filed a lawsuit that claimed supervisors did not give adequate consideration to the environmental effects of development allowed in the original Carmel Valley Master Plan.

Silver agreed and ordered the county to develop a revised plan, which still must be approved by the courts after adoption by supervisors.

Carmel council to ponder costs of city hall repairs

A HINT of how the Carmel City Council views the future of city hall may be forthcoming next week.

The council is expected to determine just how much money to spend on city hall building repairs when it meets at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 3 at city hall.

The council on Dec. 20 originally was to hear a report from City Administrator Doug Schmitz on the condition of city hall. However, the report was postponed until Jan. 3.

Council members should approve an "immediate" $6,000 repair project if they want to later proceed with extensive remodeling plans to maintain the present city hall site, Schmitz says in his report.

Or the council should allocate $25,000 for what Schmitz calls "intermediate" repairs to city hall if it wants seriously to consider relocation of the municipal facility, east side of Monte Verde Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues.

In his preliminary report Schmitz recommends that the city spend the $25,000 to pay for some immediately-needed repairs plus fumigation to rid the building of termites and other pests.

In addition, Schmitz wants council approval for city staff to prepare a report on possible alternative sites for city hall.

CONSTRUCTION of a new dam to provide water for anticipated future needs of the Monterey Peninsula became a major political issue in 1983. While the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District moved slowly ahead to determine the feasibility of construction of a new dam on the Carmel River, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors launched its own project — a plan to construct a major dam on the Arroyo Seco River with a 100,000 ac. ft. reservoir. The Arroyo Seco dam, if built, would serve both the Monterey Peninsula and Salinas Valley, but the suggested "Pools" site raised objections from environmentalists who protested the fact the project would inundate the Arroyo Seco gorge area (above) within a portion of the Ventana Wilderness. By the end of 1983, however, some support for the Arroyo Seco project withered as Salinas Valley farmers withdrew their support for the dam.

1983: The year in review

JANUARY

As the year opened, the city of Carmel was taking steps toward building an underground parking facility in conjunction with the proposed Harrison Memorial Library annex. Estimated cost for the 20-space facility was $306,800. The next step: an environmental assessment by the city to determine whether a complete EIR must be prepared.

Analyzing the possible effects of the election of Louis ("Bill") Honig as the new state Superintendent of Public Instruction, officials of the Carmel Unified School District said they anticipate tougher graduation requirements, longer school hours and school days, more homework, strict discipline and a renewed emphasis on English, math, science and history.

Attorneys for the Monterey County Board of Supervisors and Rancho Canada Golf and Country Club filed a request for a rehearing on a ruling by the First District Court of Appeals. That court had upheld the invalidation of a use permit to construct a hotel on the golf course site in Carmel Valley. Rancho Canada attorney Michael Albov said "there was substantial misunderstanding and substantial issues were not addressed" by the appeals court.

City and county officials appeared to agree on one subject: that the year 1983 would bring "a host of challenges." Among the most challenging: completion of general plans, finding a solution to the water situation, construction of the library annex, decisions about parking in Carmel, senior citizen housing, recreation, river erosion, financial cutbacks at Community Hospital and on a larger scale the local, state and national economy.

The Carmel City Council dealt with a local question by tabling it: the mayor of Carmel will still be elected directly by the voters. The issue had been raised by Mayor Charlotte Townsend, who recommended a return to election by the council instead of by popular vote. It was tabled in spite of some support among council members, partly because there had been only two years' experience with the new system.

The Carmel City Council selected a new city administrator: Douglas Schmitz, assistant city manager of Bellevue, Wash. Schmitz, the unanimous choice of the council after an intensive search, was to assume his duties Feb. 28. He was hired to replace Douglas Peterson as city administrator.

Carmel Valley took its place on the wine map with an announcement that the federal government awarded the area a viticulture appellation for the first time. The action was expected to trigger plans to start at least three new vineyards in addition to Durney Vineyard, the first successful commercial wine-producing venture in the area.

The Flanders Estate inside Mission Trail Park should not be sold. That was the conclusion of a special citizens' committee appointed by the Carmel City Council to develop recommendations on the future of the park.

The Carmel City Council made a choice: the city Christmas tree will now be a coast redwood. The new tree, a departure from tradition, will replace the aged and ailing Monterey pine that was removed earlier in the month.

The Carmel City Council rejected a proposal by the Carmel Citizens Committee to place the issue of whether to keep or sell Piccadilly Park before the voters. Instead, the council voted to accept a conceptual landscape design by architect Gordon Andrews of Santa Cruz. Subsequently, the Carmel Citizens Committee decided not to mount an initiative drive to place the fate of the park on the ballot, because of fears that would link the non-partisan organization with park opponents.

A series of storms brought rain, hail and wind to the peninsula. High water continued to erode banks along the Carmel River and threatened the abutments to Schulte and Boronda bridges, while unusually high tides buffeted the Carmel Beach seawall and threw driftwood and kelp up onto Scenic Road. The Carmel police and fire departments were kept busy with alarms, flooding and reports of trees and wires down, with one tree falling onto a Monte Verde Street home. No injuries were reported.

FEBRUARY

A new citizens advisory committee met for the first time to consider the Carmel Valley Master Plan, already the object of five years of bitter debate, lawsuits and developers' anxieties. The committee task: to recommend a rewritten master plan to the Monterey Planning Commission within three months. Further controversy was anticipated when the committee faced the question of whether to deal with "the political realities" of Carmel Valley Ranch.

The fury of Mother Nature continued to wreak havoc throughout the peninsula. Although Carmel escaped relatively unscathed, stairways to the beach collapsed or were damaged and local beaches were strewn with debris.

Parent groups, angry over a 3 percent pay raise for Carmel Unified School District administrators, said they will have to reassess their considerable financial and moral support for the district. The pay raises, including a flat 5 percent for Supt. William Rand, were granted on a split vote (3-2) by the school trustees.

The California Highway Patrol reported that traffic accidents on Carmel Valley Road have decreased steadily since 1968. However, officials said they don't really know why both average daily traffic figures and the number of accidents have decreased.

Sandor Salgo, music director and conductor of the Carmel Bach Festival announced a first for the popular musical event: the festival will be performed a full three weeks this year.

A survey of Pine Cone/Outlook readers revealed that a majority of respondents to the newspaper's questionnaire believe Piccadilly Park should be sold, and the money used to finance a new parking facility. Only 70 of the 227 respondents favored keeping the Dolores Street lot and developing it as a park.

The Carmel City Council and board members of the Carmel Business Association met for a joint work sessions. Members of both groups agreed that this initial meeting served its purpose to open the lines of communication between city officials, residents and the business community. They also agreed that the council and merchants need to sit down and talk more often.

Carmel Valley Ranch won annexation to the California-American Water Co., and gained the right to use at least 16 acre feet of water annually to supply its proposed 100-unit resort lodge. One of several conditions: ranch developers must cooperate with local agencies in efforts to increase production of treated wastewater for irrigation. An acre foot is 325,581 gallons.

Convinced that Fifth District Supervisor William Peters of Carmel Valley is vulnerable, Edwin Lee of Carmel threw his hat into the ring for the 1984 primary election. Lee, who was re-elected to a four-year term on the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District board, joined former Carmel Councilman Howard Brunn in opposing Peters. Brunn had not yet officially declared his candidacy, but had told the Pine Cone/Outlook last November that he was organizing support for the race.

The Monterey County Board of Supervisors made it possible for owners of 187 lots of record in Carmel Valley to develop their properties.

The supervisors accepted a recommendation to that effect in spite of a 1981 engineering report that said any added wastewater in four Valley "sub-basins" would degrade groundwater beyond established limits.

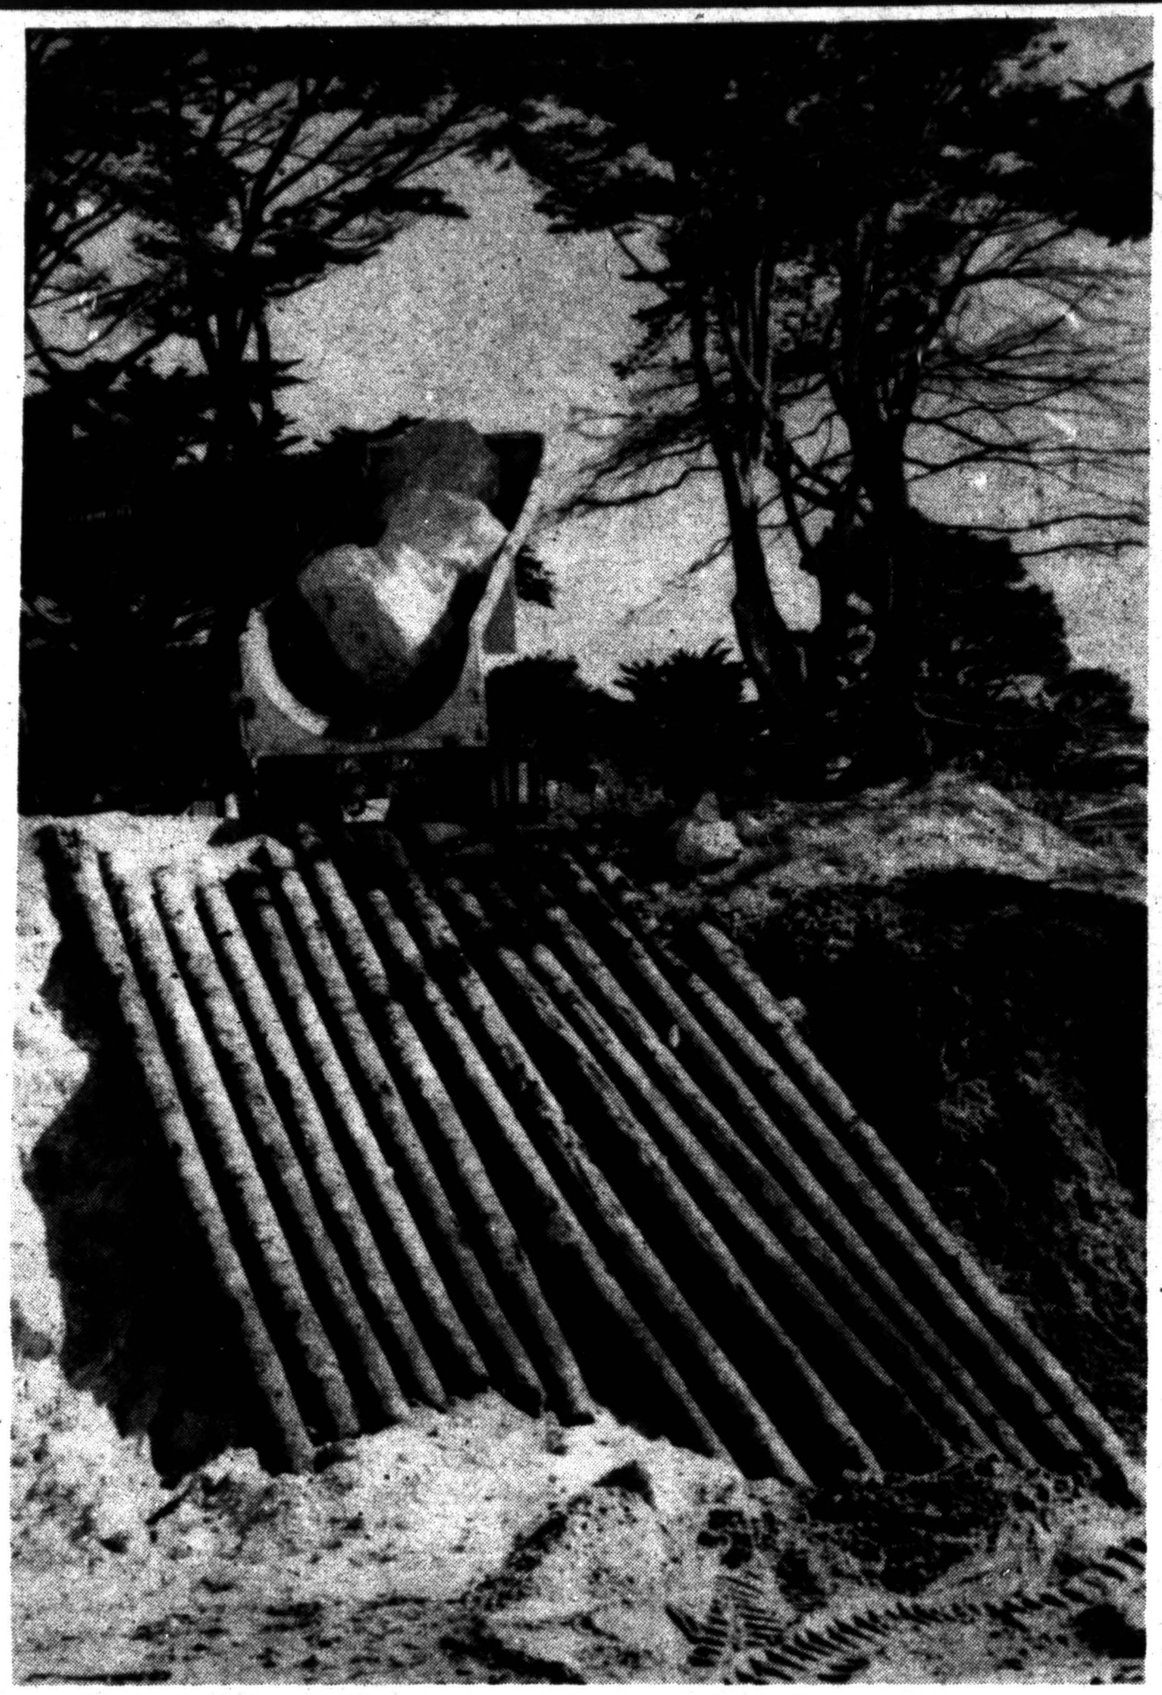
A group of citizens exploring the possibility of building a covered swimming pool for local residents came up with Carmel Middle School as "the most logical" location, and cited the availability of land and other nearby athletic facilities. The group planned to make a formal request to the board of education for donation of one acre of vacant land adjacent to the pool. The estimated $1 million in construction costs would be raised locally, the committee said.

MARCH

Mayor Charlotte Townsend fired off a telegram to Washington, D.C. to protest a plan to sink old nuclear submarines off the Mendocino coast. Backed by a unanimous city council, Mayor Townsend advocated land disposal rather than risking "potential cost to the environment, tourist industry, commercial and sport fishing."



MASSIVE BOULDERS were dumped on Carmel Beach throughout fall and early winter as the city began a race against time and Mother Nature to armor the banks against the upcoming storms. The banks were severely eroded by the storms of 1982-83 and the city immediately launched a $550,000 beach rehabilitation project that included the placement of tons of riprap along the beach banks.

Opponents of plans to build a freeway through Hatton Canyon labelled the California Transportation Commission hearing in Carmel "a charade." Commission chairman Ivan Hinderaker said: "It is extremely unlikely that the commission will be rescinding the Hatton Canyon route." Opponents concluded that commission members came into the meeting "with their minds already made up."

"New information" apparently came to the attention of some Monterey County supervisors, with the result that development densities in the Del Monte Forest Local Coastal Program might be reduced.

The Carmel Unified School was seen as "awash in a $723,000 sea of red ink," with little hope of rescue for the coming budget year. That was the "worst case" prediction of Business Manager Robert Zampatti, who said that he had to take conservative point of view as budget study sessions began. A special budget task force was formed and began discussions on how to financially rebuild the school system.

The full effects of the disastrous winter storms were being assessed at Carmel Beach, Carmel River, Big Sur and the canyons south of Carmel. The Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook recorded the refusal of those concerned to be discouraged as they planned to clean up, repair and restore, and to renew their normal lives. Rainfall on the peninsula hit a 30-year and then a 75-year high as precipitation continued.

City officials were especially concerned about the wounds Carmel Beach suffered, but were unable to plan repair work until the season ends. The city's application for a $195,000 federal disaster aid grant was under review.

A door-to-door campaign to place the fate of Piccadilly Park on the ballot began. Leader of the initiative campaign was former Carmel Mayor Barney Laiolo. The signatures of 575 registered voters who live in the city limits were required to certify the measure for the ballot.

Supervisor William Peters stirred things up with claims that Carmel Valley Ranch has a "vested right" to water supplies. Peters based that contention on a court case the county won in 1980. County officials and opposing attorneys were quick to respond as the planned 100-unit resort lodge continued to be a stormy issue.

A $2.8 million lawsuit against the California-American Water Co. got underway in Monterey County Superior Court. The suit was filed by 10 Carmel Valley residents, who contended that Cal-Am was the culprit responsible for Carmel River bank erosion because of the pumping from commercial Cal-Am wells. It was believed that the suit could have far-reaching implications for the health of the Carmel River, as well as the "alleged stealth" of Cal-Am.

A plan to change the Carmel City Council meeting time raised fundamental questions about the agenda preparation process, why ordinances are not first subjected to a public hearing, and whether a 4 p.m. time would restrict or promote citizen participation in city government. A public meeting for discussion of the proposed change in meeting time was scheduled for April 5.

Construction of a five-space parking lot at Mission Trail Park was approved by the city council on a split vote. A special city committee that recommended the action also appeared to have reached a consensus that the Flanders Mansion should be leased to a nonprofit organization that would operate local activities.

A major shakeup in the Carmel city finance department saw finance director Jim Bajari submit an oral resignation and then get assigned temporarily to work on special projects. City Forester Greg D'Ambrosio was appointed to the position of assistant city admininstrator/finance and Assistant City Forester Gary Kelly was named acting city forester.

The goals of the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District and its "crisis of direction" were explored in a special report in the Pine Cone/Outlook. The democratic process itself was seen as taking its toll on the time and efficiency of the board, with complaints that studies — not action — were what the public was getting. Whether the board mission was to build a new dam on Carmel River or creatively to manage existing water supplies was also at issue.

A young sea otter died while a Carmel animal control officer watched helplessly because of "beaureaucratic red tape and an inter-office snafu," which called into question the care and transportation of injured beached marine life. However, a local veterinarian said the animal would have died anyway: "It died because it was sick."

APRIL

A lawsuit was filed in an attempt to halt development of a 100-unit motel complex at Carmel Valley Ranch. The suit was filed on behalf of the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, the Carmel Area Coalition and the Carmel City Council. The action contended that supervisors violated the planning process when they approved a conditional use permit for the resort last year because that decision was based on an outdated 1975 environmental impact report. The lawsuit also claimed that the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District should not have approved annexation of the motel complex to the California-American Water Co. service area.

The Carmel Valley Master Plan advisory committee issued a statement that Carmel Valley Ranch has no more right to water than any other development in Carmel Valley. This was contrary to Supervisor William Peters' statements that the ranch had a "vested right" to water allocations received from the county.

Trustees of the Carmel Unified School District approved the sale of Carmel Woods Elementary School to a private educational facility, Briarcliff Academy, but said that while the sale may be "a shot in the arm" for the fiscally-ailing district, it would not be a miracle cure for the 1983-84 budget.

Carmel River residents received the good news that $144,000 of a $4.6 billion federal jobs bill had been earmarked for repair of the river bank near Schulte Bridge, and that the Corps of Engineers was considering levee restoration work upstream of the bridge. They got bad news, too, however: the U.S. Soil Conservation Service announced that it would not spend any more money to halt riverbank erosion along the river.

The new owners of the Highlands Inn embarked on a $30 million "transformation" project that was to bring the number of accommodations to 143. The lodge, restaurants, lounges, meeting rooms and gift shops were all scheduled for renovation and townhouse units will replace the world-famous wedding chapel. However, hotel officials were certain that weddings would continue to take place in other areas of the refurbished facility.

Opponents of plans to develop Piccadilly Park announced that they were "over the top" in acquiring enough signatures to force a special election on whether to continue the development or sell the Dolores Street property. Supporters of the park learned that their planned initiative campaign was deemed not "proper" for the ballot.

In an apparent change of heart, directors of the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District agreed to draw up an environmental impact report that would give them accurate cost estimates for another dam on the Carmel River. In November, the board had agreed to initate the environmental review process for Carmel river projects, but in December, the directors had withdrawn that agreement. A "fish mitigation" measure is one concept involved in the EIR.

After 16 years of struggling, Bruna Odello finally secured official permission to develop her land south of the Carmel River when the Coastal Commission approved the Carmel Area Local Coastal Program. In spite of the victory, Mrs. Odello was "furious" at the city of Carmel in general and City Atty. George Brehmer in particular for their unsuccessful efforts to get the commission to halt all development on her property.

A landslide which blocked Carmel Valley Road continued to come down, and county officials were stymied in their efforts to deal with the problem. Further geologic tests were required, they said, while a $200,000 hillside home which had been threatening to go down also was surrounded by cables and pulled apart. A temporary one-lane detour was opened during limited hours to handle commuter traffic. County officials estimated that the road would remain closed for at least 60 days.

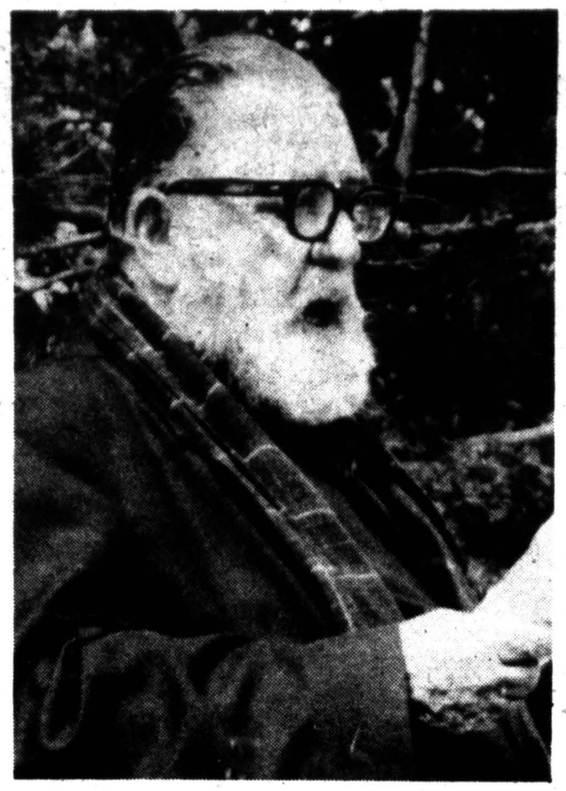
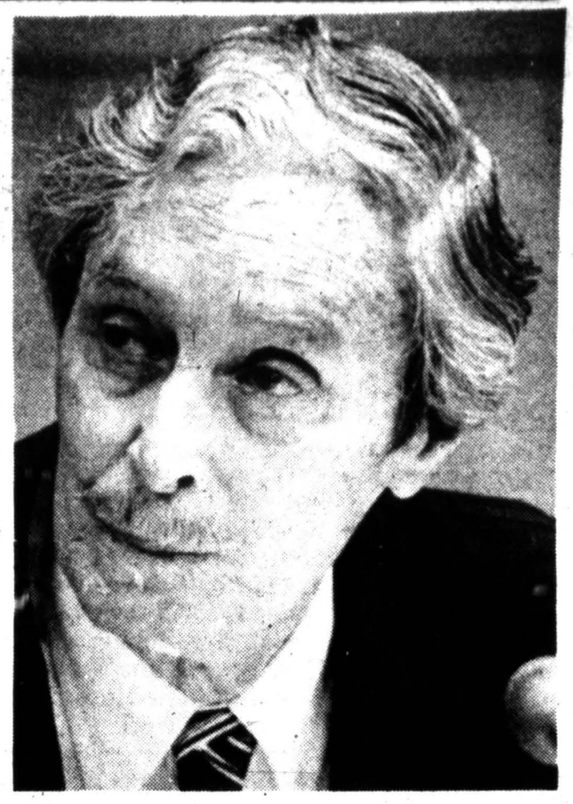
The expected reopening of Highway 1 north of Big Sur was postponed once again as rains slowed down reconstruction of roads in that area. Big Sur had been practically shut off from the rest of the world for two months since heavy rainstorms triggered landslides that obliterated portions of the highway.

MAY

With the death of Stephen Crouch, Carmel



FATHER Lawrence Farrell, affectionately known as "the peninsula's priest," died in August at the age of 75. Father Farrell had been involved in many activities and organizations in the Carmel area during his lifetime.



CARMEL CITY Councilman Frank Lloyd, long known for his environmental views and honorary title as beachmaster, died in 1983 at the age of 76. His seat on the council was filled by the appointment of James Wright, a former planning commissioner.

lost a photographer and author known world-wide for his beautiful landscape and seascape images. With "prose that matched the beauty of his images," Crouch was at work on his fourth book at the time of his death.

A special citizens committee recommended that the city of Carmel work with the Carmel Unified School District to establish an area-wide recreation program for all ages, governed by a commission and overseen by a paid director. The committee recommended an enclosed swimming pool, preferably at Sunset Center, as the centerpiece of the program.

The California Transportation Department recommended that the state transportation commission fund the full cost of construction for the proposed Hatton Canyon Freeway. The recommendation was to be reviewed by the commission July 1. If approved, the project could begin in the 1987-88 fiscal year.

Praise went out, and thanks, to a Carmel Valley couple who allowed the county to build a one-way road through their property after a landslide closed Carmel Valley Road. Lynne and Don Koontz became local heroes when their action opened an alternate to the detour via Los Laureles Grade.

The Carmel Valley Property Owners Association asked for contributions from the community to support its lawsuit against Monterey County and the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District. The suit alleged failure to comply with California Environmental Quality Act guidelines when the county granted a use permit and the water district annexed a 100-unit resort lodge at Carmel Valley Ranch to the California-American Water Co. service area.

Highway 1 from Carmel to Big Sur reopened. The road had lost out to landslides in March; since that time only residents were allowed in and out of Big Sur, during limited hours.

A coalition of environmentalist groups launched a campaign to protect Pico Blanco, a Big Sur natural landmark, and the nearby Little Sur River from heavy mining. The coalition wanted Monterey County supervisors to take responsibility for the fate of the 3,709-foot mountain. Granite Rock Co. of Watsonville, owner of most of the mountain, plans to mine the white limestone it contains.

After it insisted it was not interested in joining the Carmel Sanitary District in its plant improvement and reclamation projects, the Pebble Beach Community Services District turned about and asked the Carmel district for assistance in efforts to obtain state and federal grants for improvements to their pump stations. Carmel Sanitary District officials were something less than wholehearted in their response to the plea for assistance. The matter was referred to district manager Michael Zambory and Pebble Beach Community Services district manager Stan Kawa for further discussion.

Imogene Speiser, president of the Association of Carmel Teachers, suggested that the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education operate a quality program until it runs out of money and then simply close school doors until next fall. Her philosophy was voiced just before the start of the trustees' budget study sessions.

Fireworks marked a meeting of the Carmel City Council but may be banned from (Carmel Beach on Independence Day. The council approved, in split votes, a number of restrictions to govern Fourth of July celebrations, then directed city officials to incorporate the restrictions in an ordinance, and scheduled a public hearing on the ordinance three weeks later. As it turned out, however, the only way the city could enact the measure in time for this year's Independence Day would be to adopt emergency ordinances that require a 4-1 vote (some of the restrictions to be spelled out in the ordinance had passed by a vote of 3-2).

JUNE

Revealed: the city of Carmel's first monetary crisis in years. A rookie Carmel City Council majority approved a 1982-83 capital improvements budget that was "more fantasy than reality," as a result of which most major building and maintenance projects have gone down the drain. City Administrator Doug Schmitz told the present council that if the city were to accomplish all the projects included in the capital improvements budget of 1982-83, there would not be any substantial reserves for emergencies in the 1983-84 fiscal year. "We just didn't know," said one council member.

The long-standing feud between the Carmel and Pebble Beach sanitary districts appeared to be headed for a showdown in Washington, D.C. as officials for both districts left to meet with Rep. Leon Panetta and a high-ranking Environmental Protection Agency official. At issue: a $12 million grant for the Carmel district's water reclamation project, opposed by the Pebble Beach district. The local officials returned with assurance from the Environmental Protection Agency that a decision on the final review of the proposed Carmel water reclamation project would be made in two weeks.

Most Carmel workers and employers live in the immediate area, drive alone to work, and believe the city should finance and build downtown parking facilities. Those were the results of a survey of merchants by the Carmel Business Association. There were 389 returns to the questionnaire developed to assist the Carmel Planning Commission and City Council with revisions to the 1973 general plan. The returns represented 613 owner/managers with 1,741 employees.

The city of Carmel filed a lawsuit against the state of California and Monterey County in an effort to halt development on the eastern side of the Odello property at Highway 1, south of Rio Road. This was the city response to Coastal Commission approval of a large residential and commercial development on the property. The city said the approval violates the state Coastal Act in its requirement that prime agricultural land in the coastal zone be protected from development.

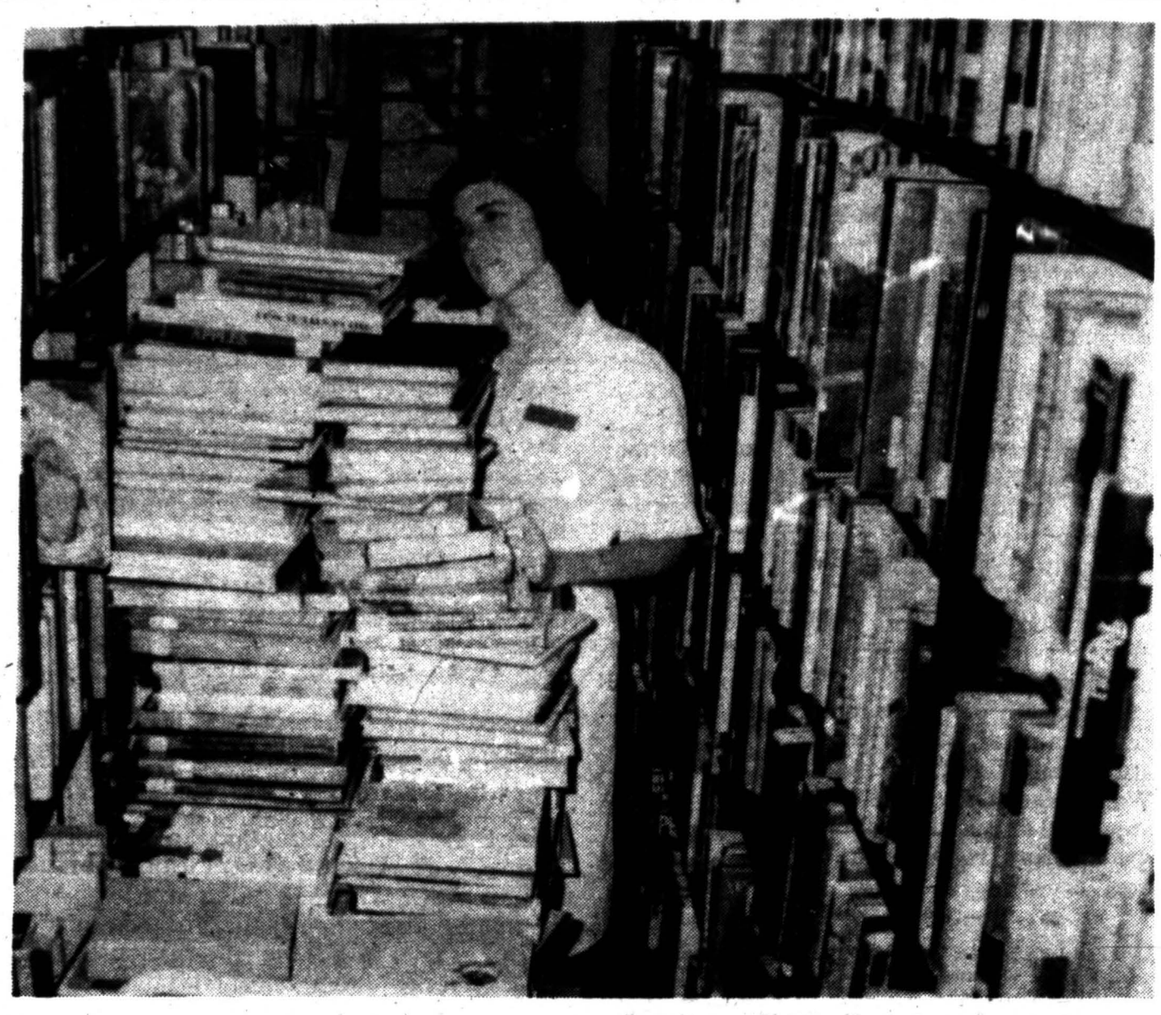
Fifth District Monterey County Supervisor William Peters may face another trial on charges related to financial disclosure and reporting as the result of a California appellate court ruling. "The people" were not adequately represented in their civil case against Peters, the court said.



SPACE PROBLEMS continued to plague Harrison Memorial Library in 1983. A proposed $1.2 million, 8,000 sq. ft. library annex perhaps was the most controversial issue — even more so than Piccadilly Park — in town during the year. The original annex plan was derailed by the council and a subsequent council proposal for a new library at Sunset Center was in kind rejected by voters.

Monterey County officials expressed concern that Carmel Valley Road may soon become a redwood logging route. The problem was that on July 1, the state was to assume control of all timber operations, including operations in Carmel Valley and Big Sur which the county had not permitted in the past. Officials said the law is so far-reaching the counties apparently would not have an opportunity to limit logging truck access on their own roads.

Plans for this year's Fourth of July fizzled out when the Carmel City Council passed emergency ordinances which banned fireworks from Carmel Beach on the holiday. The council also voted to ban fires from the beach on July 2-4, to discourage large late-night crowds.

The Monterey Peninsula Water Management District rescinded its earlier approval of the annexation of 30 acres at Carmel Valley Ranch to the California-American Water Co. service area, and cited "a process error." The ranch application was to be reconsidered at a July 14 meeting.

Carmel's nationally-famous Festival of Firsts play writing competition staggered, but did not fall, as the city's 1983-84 municipal budget was considered. The city council voted to continue its grant of $2,000 for the winning play, and $6,000 for the play's possible production, a reduction of $2,000 from the previous year.

Air quality levels in Carmel Valley have reached a point that "merits caution." That was the statement of Earl Moser, former member of the Monterey-Santa Cruz Counties Joint Air Pollution Control District. Blame was placed on the urban Santa Clara/-San Francisco counties area.

Carmel Valley Road reopened with appropriate fanfare and sighs of relief from local merchants who had waited out the three-month, storm-induced closure.

The Carmel City Council scheduled a public hearing on its latest moratorium: a prohibition against the construction of new two-story residences. A sudden rush of applications for two-story homes ensued, amid competing cries of "they are a threat to the character of Carmel" and "two-story homes...add interest to the town."

The long-simmering feud between Carmel PhotoArt, its business rival Carmel Camera Center, and the city of Carmel boiled over into Monterey County Superior Court. PhotoArt filed a suit which alleged interference with its business and frustration of its plans to sell the business. The city planned to sue in order to force compliance with zoning laws. Carmel Camera Center also announced plans for a suit, which was expected to include charges of harassment and unfair competition.

JULY

As the month opened, the proposed Harrison Memorial Library annex faced a new series of obstacles: suspension of city council plans to build a parking garage beneath the annex, a new proposal to move Carmel City Hall, and the revival of a moribund plan by the county to build a branch library at the mouth of Carmel Valley. In addition, plans for the annex, at one time thought to be a sure thing, faced the uncertainties of future county funding and city council reluctance to subsidize the library for its annex operations.

After more than two decades of lively debate, funds to build a freeway through Hatton Canyon were approved by the state highway commission.

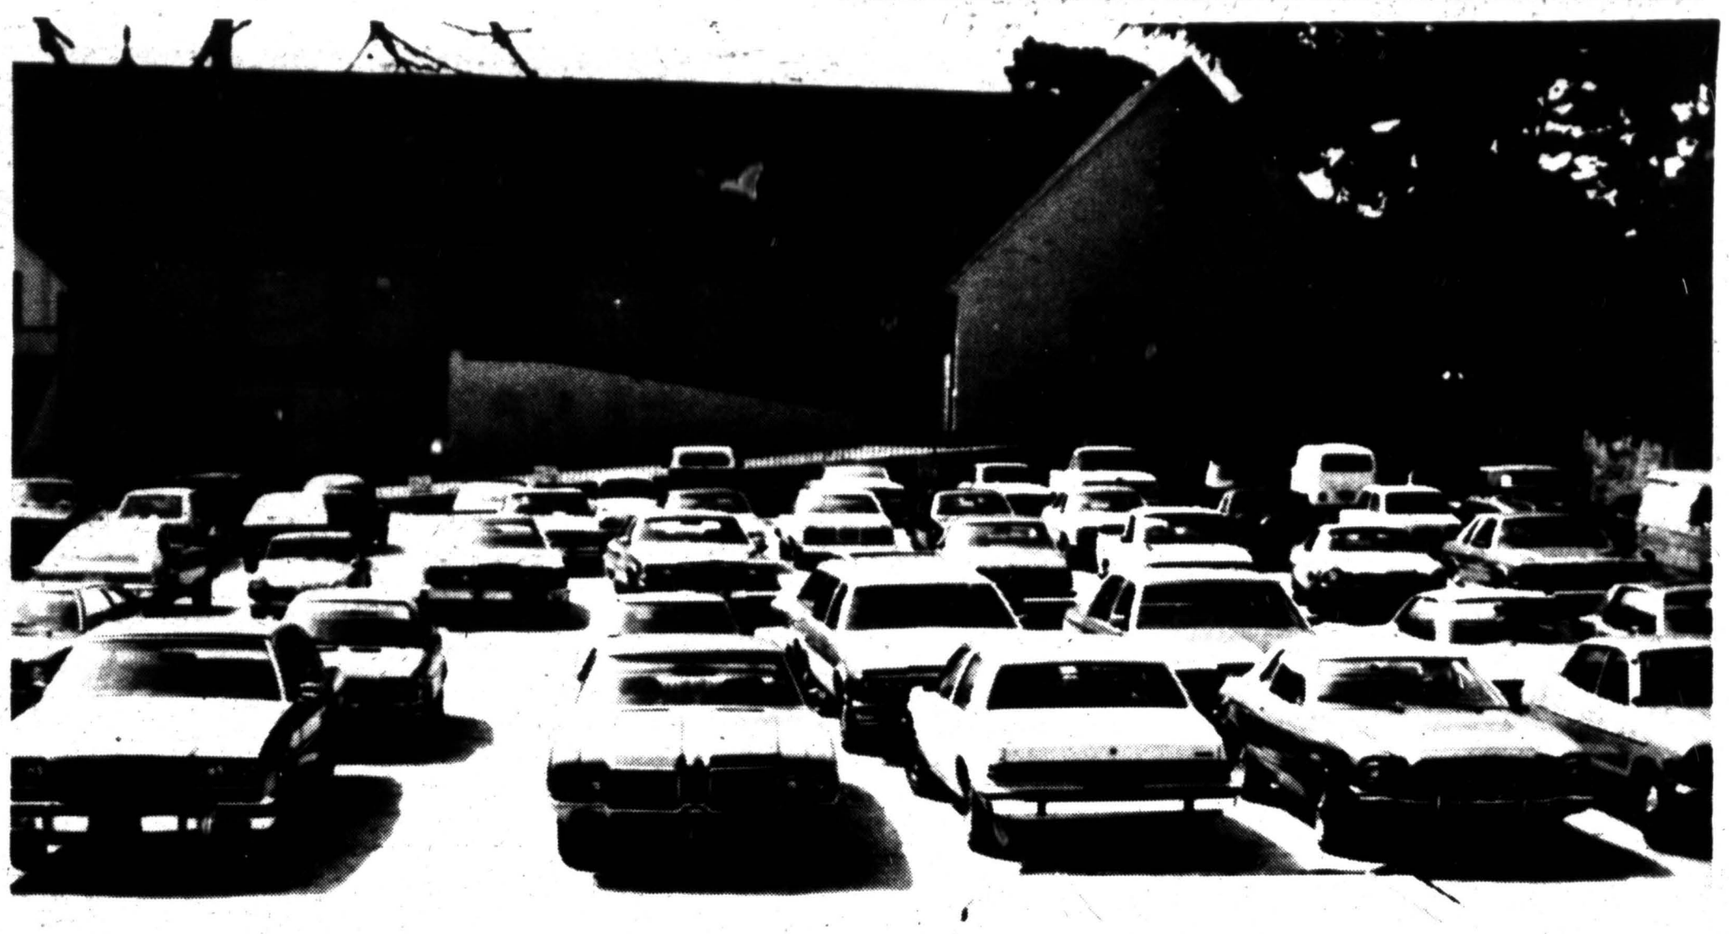
Police reported no major problems as Carmel celebrated a quiet Fourth of July. City-enacted restrictions on fireworks, beach access and even on bonfires combined with foggy weather to greatly reduce the number of beachgoers.



PARKING WAS as troublesome as ever in 1983 as the city debated ways to solve the headache. It was discussed in the revisions to the 1973 general plan and was the subject of a major election Nov. 8. Voters went to the polls that day and rejected a council scheme to build a library, park and parking lot at Sunset Center. However, the council interpreted the vote as being against the relocation of the library rather than in opposition to a parking garage. Plans are proceeding for a multi-level garage at Sunset Center.

A new focus for controversy over the proposed Piccadilly Park arose when the Carmel-by-the-Sea Garden Club offered to "spruce up" the front of the site by planting shrubs and flowers and "designing an inviting sitting area." Seen as a political move by some, the idea met with a mixed response among council members.

Officials of the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District reported that the district 1983-84 budget represents a commitment to a new dam on the Carmel River. Roughly 40 percent of the $626,390 district budget would be spent for the first step, officials said: completion of an environmental impact report for a proposed reservoir and dam at the San Clemente site, and appraisal of land costs and hydroelectric power potential at the site.

Carmel Valley Ranch will not be able to annex a 30-acre parcel to the California-American Water Co. if tests show sufficient water exists in the so-called Tularcitos aquifer. That was the definition Monterey Peninsula Water Management District manager Bruce Buel put on a motion water board members passed at a fiery meeting. Buel commented that he did not think anyone understood the action, or its consequences at the time.

Jim Yates, a Carmel resident who has two children in Carmel schools, wrote a letter to the school district to state his strongly-felt views about school programs and the current fiscal crisis. He said the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education needs to assume a strong leadership role and completely overhaul district program "based on the needs of tomorrow."

Toward the end of the month, an entirely new plan for the Harrison Memorial Library received concept approval from the city council. The plan included relocation of city hall to the present library site and construction of a new library, underground parking garage and park at Sunset Center. The council was to consider ordering a Nov. 8 advisory ballot on what it assumed could be a controversial plan.

An issue once thought dead rose again: Carmel businessman Paul Laub requested the city council to reopen the question of the name of the Carmel Post Office at the mouth of the Valley. Laub claimed that only the post office located in the city of Carmel should have that name, and suggested "Greater Carmel" for the newer office.

Carmel Valley residents forsook their pocketbooks in favor of the rehabilitation of Carmel River with a resounding vote that created the Carmel River Management Zone.

Former Carmel Mayor Barney Laiolo's initiative petition to place the disposition of Piccadilly Park before the electorate received the required number of signatures. The Carmel City Council was therefore expected to order a binding measure to be placed on the Nov. 8 ballot.

Carmel received $100,568 in federal disaster funds to repair city property and reimburse city coffers for money spent to clean up after heavy winter storms — a far cry from the approximately $460,000 city officials had sought.

AUGUST

The revised draft of the Carmel Valley Master Plan was completed by a citizens advisory committee and sent on its way to the Monterey County Planning Commission, where it will be the subject of a public hearing, probably in early fall. The revised plan projects a development limit of 2,500 units — exactly the same as in the original plan — and includes only one of several co-called "trigger mechanisms" to halt growth when adverse environmental effects threaten.

Carmel — and the entire Monterey Peninsula — lost "a tireless worker who devoted more than half a century in service to his church and God," when Father Lawrence H. Farrell died of a heart attack at 75. Known for his wit and brilliant oratory, Father Farrell was often thought of as "the peninsula's priest" because of his lengthy service here and his involvement in community activities.

Pressure mounted on the California Department of Transportation to reopen the Big Sur road as both Carmel and Big Sur merchants anticipated what could be a record tourist year in 1984. Citing the presence of hundreds of thousands of Democrats, Olympics-goers and baseball fans expected to converge on California, and the difficulty of their reaching this part of the state if the road remains closed, Paul Laub and other merchants asked Cal-Trans officials to speed up the work of clearing the road of landslides that resulted from the extensive winter storms.

Carmel City Atty. George Brehmer resigned after nearly a decade of service to the city during which he established a well-deserved reputation as the arch-enemy of developers in Carmel Valley and the rural areas south of the city.

The Carmel River Steelhead Association went ahead with plans to rescue steelhead, in spite of a recent agreement between the State Department of Fish and Game and the California-American Water Co. to release water from the San Clemente Dam for the rest of the summer. An association spokesman said the release of three cubic feet per second might not be enough to maintain fish life in the river.

The Monterey County Planning Commission approved a policy to toughen mining requirements on Pico Blanco in Big Sur. The policy states that the Granite Rock Co. must show that mining can be done "in a manner consistent with the preservation of local esthetic and physical resource values." Mining operations must also conform with policies of the Big Sur Local Coastal program.

The Carmel City Council unanimously granted concept approval to a plan to place a series of three- to five-ton boulders in several areas along Carmel Beach, the first phase of a long-range master plan to restore the beach. It was also the first move in a race with time and Mother Nature to complete a $500,000 plan to protect the storm-damaged beach and banks against winter storms.

The council also approved a reorganization of the building and planning departments to a single Department of Community Planning and Building. City Administrator Doug Schmitz said the consolidation "demonstrates the commitment of the council and the staff to sound planning principles and practices," and will provide more time for planning matters. Robert Griggs, city planning director, was named to head the new department.

SEPTEMBER

Several major Carmel-area landowners filed petitions to have their properties excluded from the Carmel Valley Master Plan. They claimed that the properties — which ranged from the Odello artichoke fields south of Rio Road all the way to High Meadows II area east of Carpenter Street and Highway 1 — already are governed by other planning documents. Meanwhile, the Carmel City Council decided to proceed with a lawsuit aimed at stopping the proposed residential subdivision on the Odello property.

Palo Colorado residents threatened civil disobedience as one reaction to the possibility of having their road used in logging operations. Lawsuits against the state forestry department were also planned by the group, which jammed a public hearing.

A disgruntled retiring member of the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education blasted district policies — from graduation requirements to personnel hirings to the budget process. Barbara Sanford, who said she would not seek re-election to the board, was especially critical of central office administrators and the inability of trustees to reduce their numbers. School officials refuted the stinging critique, especially Mrs. Sanford's charge that sometimes friendship instead of experience was the basis of hiring or granting teacher tenure. At the same time, they indicated basic agreement with her complaints about large class sizes and lenient graduation requirements.

The Carmel Citizens Committee criticized proposed revisions in the Carmel General Plan as being too specific, possibly ineffective and frequently based on dubious economic assumptions. The committee made those criticisms in a six-page statement presented to the Carmel City Council. Planning Director Robert Griggs said the committee comments would be studied and seriously taken into consideration.

Granite Rock Co. lost its first round in the Pico Blanco limestone mining fight when the Coastal Commission attached four restrictive conditions to trail relocation and grading work already underway on the promontory. A spokesman for the Pico Blanco Coalition said that the coalition was pleased with the conditions imposed by the commission but that "this doesn't mean the battle of Pico Blanco is over."

Carmel and the Monterey Peninsula lost a prominent architect and civic leader with the death of Robert Stanton. Stanton designed Monterey Peninsula College, the Monterey County Courthouse, a junior high school and many commercial buildings, schools and homes. He was active in many community organizations and served as president of the Monterey County Symphony Association and other groups, as well as being a charter member of the Carmel Rotary Club.

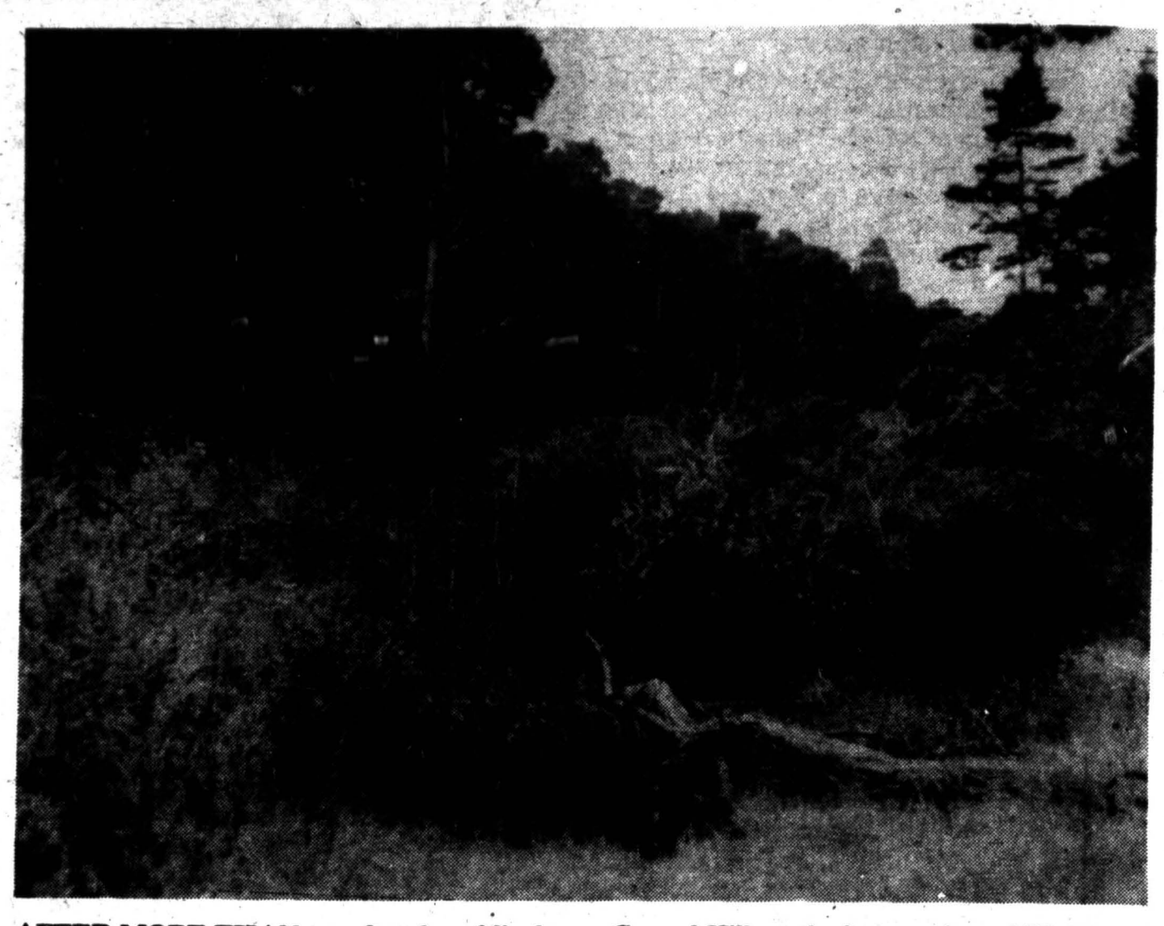
The Carmel City Council began consideration of an ordinance to raise the city hostelry tax from 8 to 10 percent, over the opposition of hotel and motel owners. The council planned to use the money — an additional $360,000 for city coffers annually — to help finance beach rehabilitation, which was scheduled to begin Oct. 20.



AFTER MORE THAN two decades of lively and sometimes-bitter debate, the state highway commission in July approved approximately $17 million for the construction of the Hatton Canyon Freeway. The controversial freeway would begin at the top of Carmel Hill, at the intersection of Highway 1 and Carpenter Street, then swoop through the steep-walled Hatton Canyon (above) and reconnect with Highway 1 near its intersection with Carmel Valley Road.

A political tug-of-war threatened to stall plans for an area-wide recreation program. The question was: which city commission will be in charge of the recreation program once it gets started? On one side was the already existing Carmel Community and Cultural Commission; on the other was a proposed separate commission on recreation.

City Administrator Doug Schmitz completed a shakeup at Carmel City Hall with the hiring of a new assistant director of planning. Also involved were former City Forester Greg D'Ambrosio, appointed to the newly created position of director of administrative services, and Planning Director Robert Griggs, named to a new position as director of community planning and building.

School officials revealed that the Carmel Unified School District had been penalized more than $20,000 by the state because of its cautious use of public monies designed for deferred maintenance projects. However, it was also reported that trustees of other districts who did not spend any of their deferred maintenance funds would not receive any money at all in promised state matching funds.

The business community was stirred on two counts: local businessman Paul Laub came out with a hope that Carmel shop employees would organize — not for union activities but to gain political clout. And Carmel City Councilman David Maradei looked for a "tough" approach to those businesses that cater primarily to tourists. Maradei promised that the proposed revisions in the Carmel General Plan eventually would work for control of tourist-oriented businesses.

OCTOBER

Carmel lost Frank Lloyd, "a man known for his strong environmental concerns, wry humor and special love for the village." Lloyd, a city councilman, died at 76 at his home after a lingering illness. James Wright, a four-year member of the Carmel Planning Commission, was selected by the city council to fill Lloyd's seat. His term will expire in April of 1984.

Two of the area's most beautiful natural resources — Point Lobos and Pfeiffer State Park — celebrated their 50th anniversaries under state protection. Celebrations drew visitors, residents and state officials to both parks for special events, and a Carmel gallery featured an exhibition of Point Lobos photographs by local and Bay Area photographers.

The Carmel Sand Castle Contest fell victim to both its own success and the poor condition of Carmel Beach this year. The city council unanimously voted to prohibit the contest. The council insisted that the contest, usually held on a not-previously-announced Sunday in October, would be resumed when the beach has been fully restored.

CARMEL VALLEY RANCH remained a controversial issue in 1983, as developers of the 500-unit project sought further approvals for new increments in the project. In April, the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, Carmel Area Coalition, and the city of Carmel filed a lawsuit which challenged a conditional use permit for the construction of a 100-unit resort lodge at the ranch, and which sought to overturn annexation of a portion of the ranch to the service area of the California-American Water Co. Although the CVPOA dropped its lawsuit in September, the Carmel Valley Master Plan Citizens' Advisory Committee warned in October against special consideration for Carmel Valley Ranch in future permit approvals.

The project manager for the Carmel beach restoration — Hop Essick of Granite Construction Co. — predicted that it will be completed by the end of January, 1984, rain or shine. Work on the $500,000 project was expected to begin early in November. Under terms of the city contract with Granite Construction, the company then has 90 days to complete the restoration.

Gary Kelly, who started working with the city of Carmel as a groundman, was appointed Carmel city forester. Kelly replaced Greg D'Ambrosio, who was named to the newly-created position of director of administrative services.

The Carmel City Council agreed to form a task force to prepare for the "inevitable multitudes" that would flock to the city if Father Junipero Serra should be canonized. With rumors flying, the possibility of a visit from Pope John Paul caused great excitement and forecasts of an "astronomical" effect on the city.

The price tag on a proposed 241-space, two-level underground parking garage at Sunset Center was placed at $2.6 million in a report by a traffic engineering firm employed to study the proposal. Voters were to be asked in an advisory ballot Nov. 8 if they support the scheme to relocate city hall and develop the parking spaces at Sunset Center.

The new draft of the Carmel Valley Master Plan, "based on the principle of uniform unhappiness," included a warning against special status for the Carmel Valley Ranch development. A second major issue concerned removal of three areas within the original (1980) plan from the proposed 1983 plan. The county has said that it approves of their removal.

Teachers and the Carmel Unified School District tentatively agreed on a new one-year contract that would grant a 2 percent pay increase to the approximately 118 certified staff in the district.

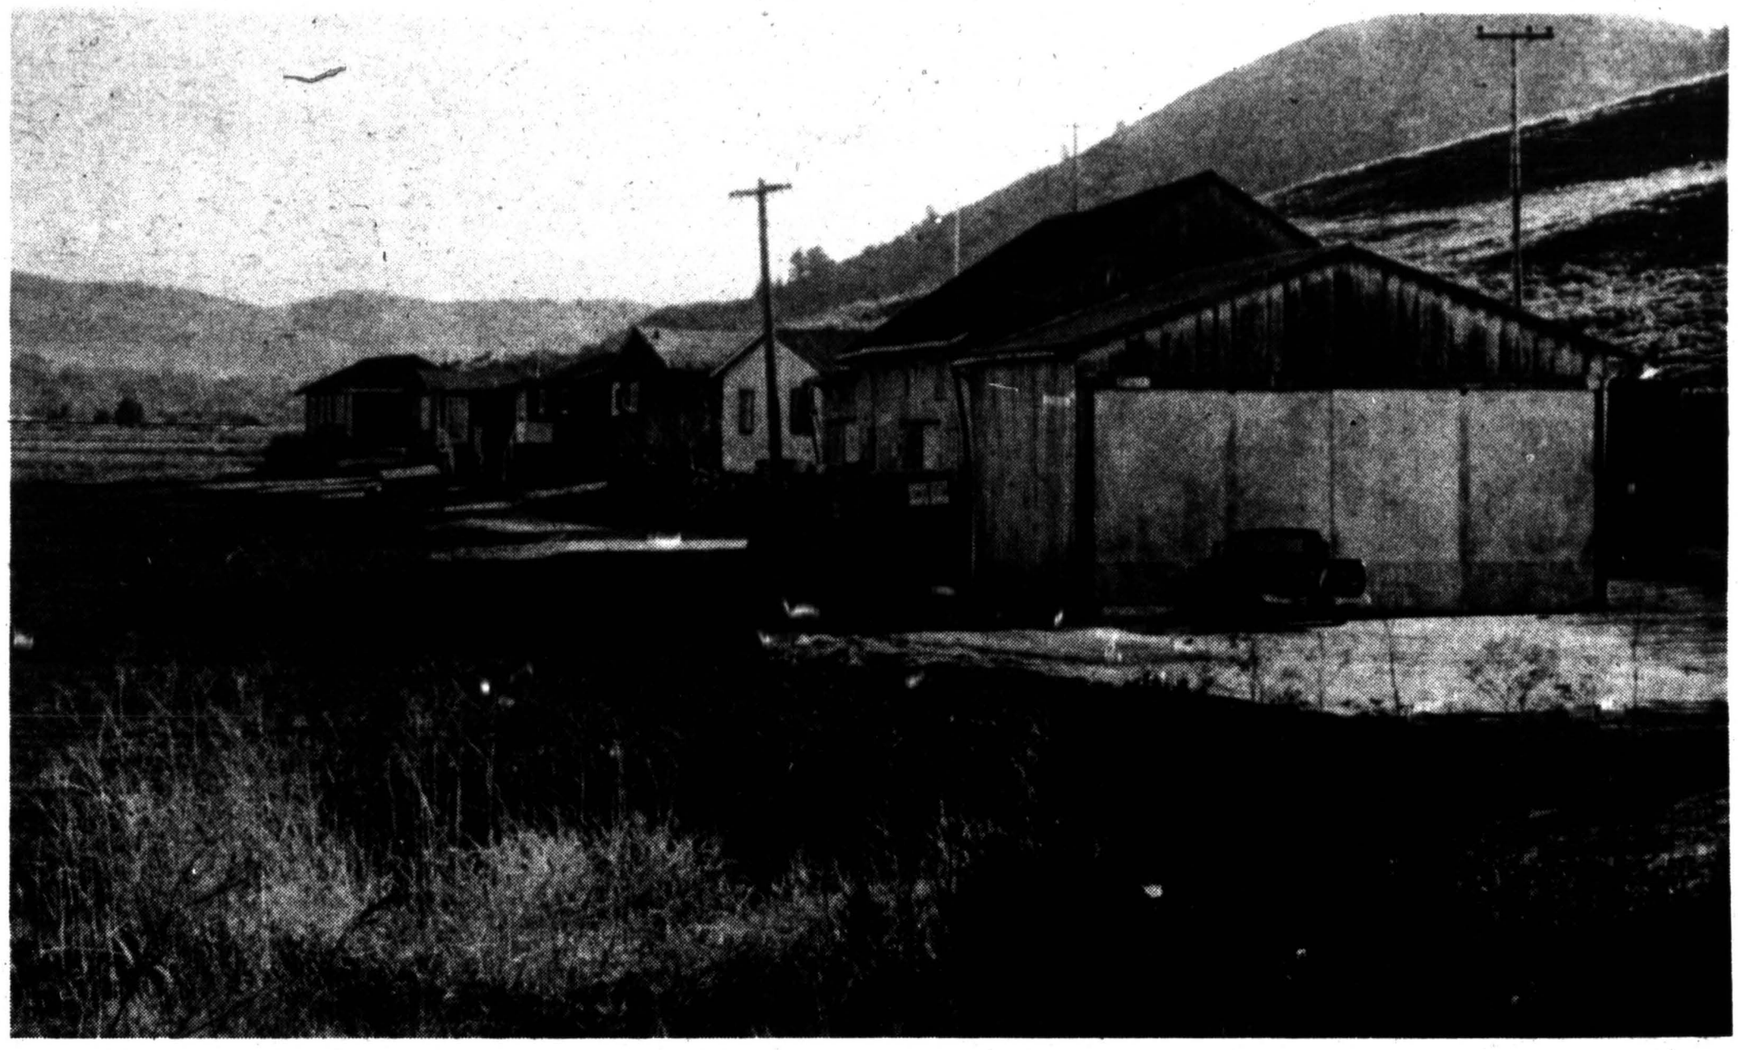
Mary Jahr-Purvis was appointed the first Carmel code enforcement officer. The former planning and building department secretary will be responsible for enforcement of all city building and zoning codes.



INCLUSION of the 134 eastern acres of the Odello Ranch in the Carmel Valley Master Plan became an issue in 1983 as the revisions to the plan were completed. Although the Odello family has received approval from the Coastal Commission and Monterey County for a 162-unit subdivision on the eastern portion of their property, Monterey County Superior Court Judge Richard Silver issued a notice of intended decision Dec. 19 that the Odello property should not be excluded from the Carmel Valley Master Plan. The Odello family has stated a preference to have the property excluded from the plan.

NOVEMBER

A Panamanian corporation became the new owner of a large chunk of commercial property in downtown Carmel. Sierra Continental Properties, which also has offices in Mexico City, bought several lots on the southwest corner of Ocean Avenue and Dolores Street. The reported price was $2.675 million for the property, which includes nine stores and offices.

plans for a proposed underground parking garage, library and park at Sunset Center, with relocation of city hall to the existing library building. In another longstanding controversial issue, citizens voted against the sale of Piccadilly Park, the 4,000 sq. ft. vacant lot on Dolores Street south of Ocean Avenue. These issues were determined by the 37.8 percent of the registered voters who went to the polls. After the election, the city council gave quick approval to development of Piccadilly Park.

Carmel Bay had some unexpected visitors: three bottle-nosed dolphins, which normally inhabit warm, southern waters. Marine biologists said their appearance in the coastal waters of northern California was a result of the "El Nino" current in the Pacific Ocean, which brought water temperatures as much as three or four degrees above normal for that time of year.

After decades of bickering over "second kitchens," the Carmel City Council approved their legalization "in concept." Actual legalization was to wait upon controls still to be developed by the planning staff and adopted by the council — probably in early 1984. However, during its final review of the housing element in the proposed new Carmel General Plan, the planning commission voted against that legalization as outlined by the city council. Instead, the commission endorsed a compromise plan to legalize the units but not to give preference to existing ones. The next move was up to the council.

When results of the California Assessment Program testing were released, Carmel parents learned that their children performed better than their counterparts in the other public school systems of the Monterey Peninsula, and significantly better than Carmel High School seniors in prior years.

The Monterey Peninsula Water Management District took a first step to determine who would pay for a proposed larger dam on the Carmel River. The district board of directors authorized its manager to invite proposals from financial consultants to analyze the financial opportunities an restraints and provide other needed information to the board.

RECREATION CONTINUED to be a major issue in Carmel. In its last meeting of 1983 the Carmel City Council authorized staff to develop a proposed limited summer program. Above, a student of the Lyceum of the Monterey Peninsula program worked in an art class at Sunset Center.

DECEMBER

The Carmel Recreation Committee decided to go ahead with plans for a limited summer program despite the attitude of the planning commission, which made it known that a majority of its members does not wholeheartedly embrace a city-wide recreation program. The committee hoped to reroute "needs assessment" survey funds into a "low-cost, pay-as-you-go limited program for mid-1984. The committee was to submit recommendations for various programs to the city council in January.

The Carmel Planning Commission endorsed a proposed water conservation ordinance that would tie water use directly to commercial development. The Carmel City Council was to consider the ordinance, which would restruct new or expanded high water use businesses, in January.

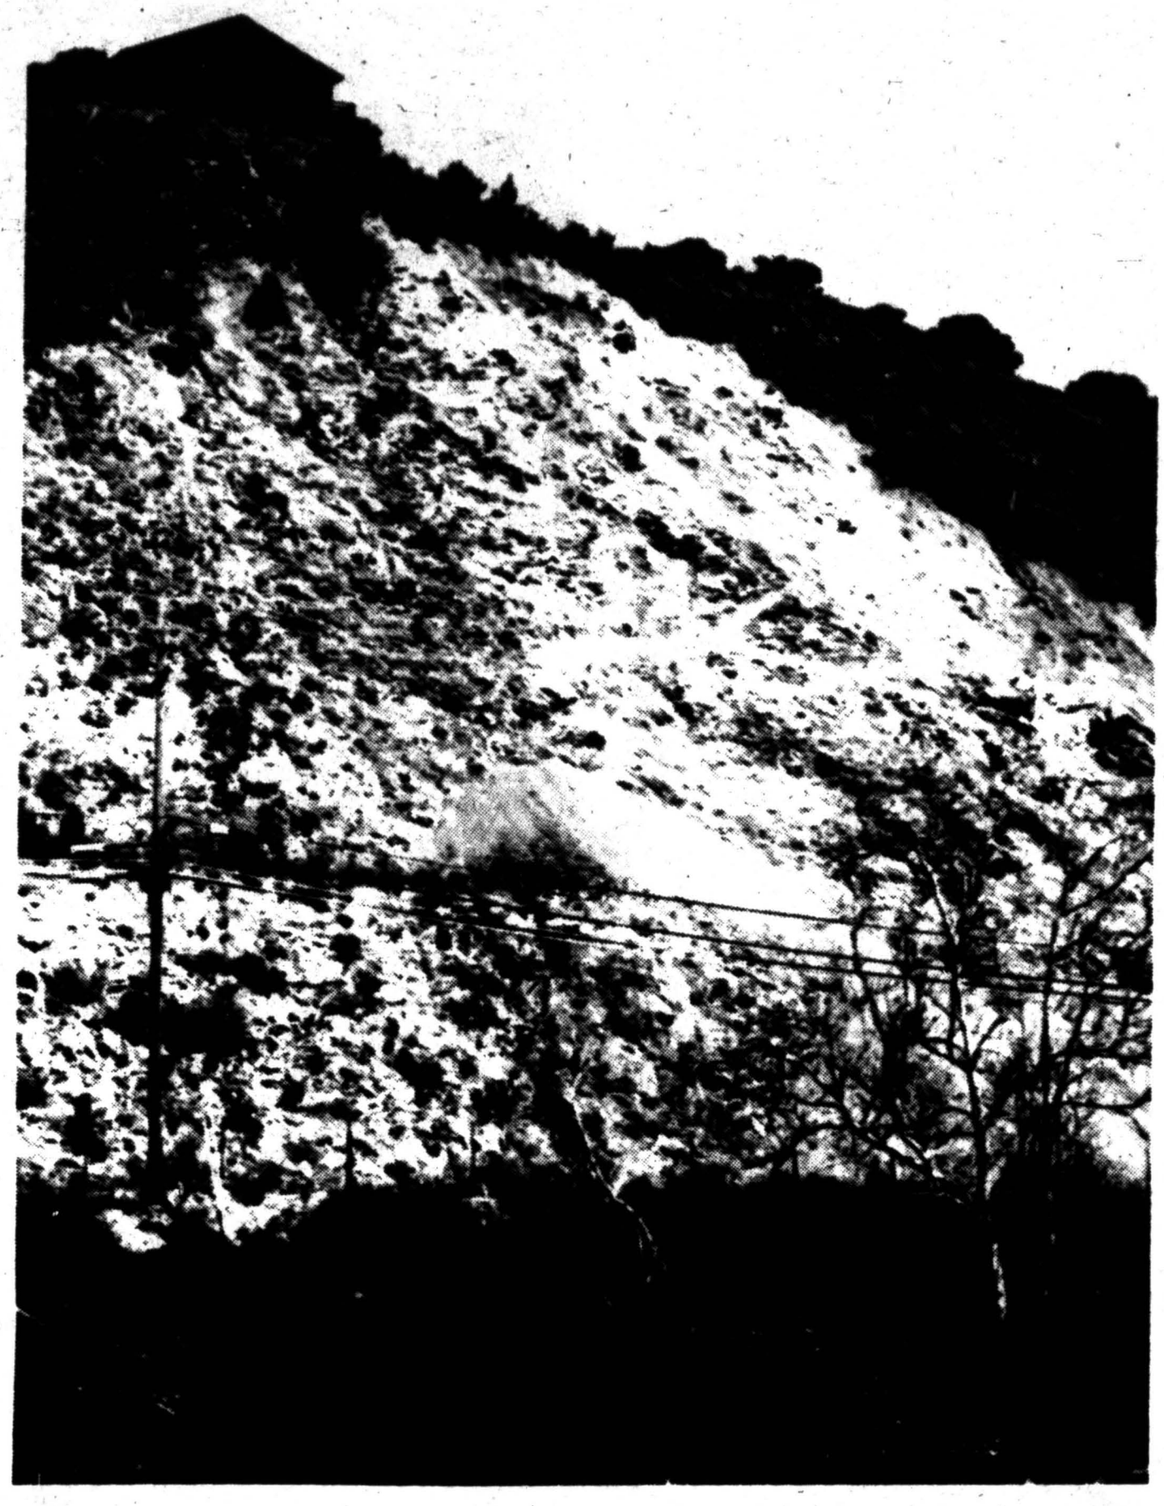
The movie star owners of 350 acres in Carmel Valley — Clint Eastwood and James Garner, with Eastwood's wife, Margaret — gave away their property to the Monterey County Housing Authority. The gift, worth approximately $2.7 million, was made with no legal conditions but with an oral agreement that the property be used to provide affordable housing for senior citizens.



A MAJOR SLIDE on the hillside adjacent to Carmel Valley Road closed the main Valley artery in April, and threatened to deposit a $200,000 home with tons of earth in the middle of Carmel Valley. The house eventually was removed, as was the rubble from the hillside — one more reminder to harried Carmel Valley residents of the power of Mother Nature to affect their lives.

After it waited six months for word from the Environmental Protection Agency on the status of an $8.5 million federal grant, the Carmel Sanitary District received a negative opinion from that agency. EPA Deputy Administrator Alvin Alm wrote that the potential adverse environmental effects of continued discharge of treated sewage effluent into Carmel Bay do not justify the cost of the project. Although this was a potentially fatal blow to the Carmel district's plans, it was welcomed by the Pebble Beach Community Services District, which has strongly opposed the reclamation project.

The Carmel City Council appeared to be focusing on two alternatives for the location of the proposed annex to Harrison Memorial Library: an extension across Lincoln Street and the Rittmaster building adjacent to the library. The council directed city staff to investigate both possibilities, including estimated costs of employing architects and engineers.

The closing session of the city council for 1983 was highlighted by final passage of the revisions to the 1973 Carmel General Plan, except for the housing element which was eliminated from the revised document because of divided opinions regarding "second kitchens." Various alternatives, including a new proposal by Councilman James Wright, will be considered. Aside from that housing element, adoption of the general plan revisions was seen as a major step for the city; the council also decided general policy guidelines for commercial development, tourist-oriented business controls and parking restrictions among other matters.

Change of command at the Bach Festival

By JOE LIVERNOIS

FOR JANET ESWEIN, the Carmel Bach Festival was as much a learning experience as a job.

For Ruth Carter, the Carmel Bach Festival promises to be as challenging as it will be enlightening.

Mrs. Eswein has turned in her key after five years as administrator for the Bach Festival. She said she leaves with fine memories, no regrets and a new-found appreciation of classical music as taught by the maestro himself.

Ms. Carter takes over the office in Sunset Center after a dozen years of varied job experience fortified by a Stanford education steeped in an appreciation for music and English literature.

Behind its stylish facade, the Bach Festival office maintained by the administrator is somewhat of a landmark in Carmel as a place where business is bedlam as usual — at least to hear Mrs. Eswein talk.

The festival has been a Carmel tradition every summer for the past 46 years.

"The things you worry about most never seem to go wrong while the unexpected does," she told the Carmel Pine Cone/-Carmel Valley Outlook last week. "It's a combination of work and enjoyment but mostly it's a whole lot of deadlines. Deadlines and cliff-hangers.

"Many people think (the festival) doesn't start until spring. But, truly, we start planning for next year immediately after the previous year's program is over."

This month, for instance, letters of invitation already have been sent to participants Maestro Sandor Salgo hopes to attract.

"There are so many logistical problems the public is never conscious of," Mrs. Eswein said.

The most important duty of the administrator is to make certain all arrangements are in order for the more than 100 musicians who participate in the three-week festival, Mrs. Eswein said.

That includes clearing all arrival dates, assuring available housing, and informing musicians of their itinerary once they arrive.

"But it's also important to establish a nice relationship with the new people so when they come in here for the first time they will have a feeling for what is going to happen," she said.

"You've got to let them know they won't have time to be visiting some Southern California beach."

Maestro Salgo gets down to business immediately after the musicians arrive and schedules twice-daily rehearsals beginning more than two weeks before the festival opens.

"THE MOST important thing is to take the time when they arrive to visit with them," Mrs. Eswein said. "And it is time wonderfully spent because for so many it's a strange environment and a heavy work schedule."

Mrs. Eswein came to the Bach Festival with extensive business managerial experience but she was not too well versed in the world of classical music. She didn't know Bach from Bacchus, so to speak.

"Maestro Salgo has given me a five-year graduate course in classical music," she said. "He is such a delightful man. A courtly man. He is so very appreciative of everything you do for him.

"I enjoyed standing in the wings during performances and watching him, watching his face. When everything is in place, he has such a look of pure delight."

She said she has no plans for the future. "I hope to be involved in something as exciting as this was," she said. "This was exciting work, really. It is such a multi-faceted position with a lot of wonderful moments."

She also vowed to stay involved with the Bach Festival on a volunteer basis.

Ms. Carter moved to the Monterey Peninsula in July and hoped to become an integral part of the peninsula. She said she figures her new position will give her that commitment.

After searching for a job for several months, she said she decided to spend six weeks in Europe. Two days before she was scheduled to leave, she learned of the Bach Festival position opening.

She "rushed around" to get her resume in, left for Copenhagen and didn't hear from the Bach Festival board. By the time she returned, she did not figure the job would still be available. It was — and it was waiting for her.

She described her work experience as "varied."

Before she moved to the Monterey Peninsula, she worked as an assistant to the controller for the San Francisco Chronicle. She lived in Walnut Creek and commuted via Bay Area Rapid Transit to work.

Between the Chronicle and her education at Stanford University, where she earned her degree in French, she worked in the administrative offices at Tulane University and Stanford.

MS. CARTER also spent some time as an investigator for the district attorney's office in Orleans Parish in Louisiana. She was responsible for interviewing victims of sex crimes and child abuse in her hometown of New Orleans.

To qualify for the investigator's job, she was schooled in a Louisiana police academy. "That ought to be enough to defend herself during the ticket rush (at the Bach Festival)," laughed Mrs. Eswein.

"We did have plenty of stress training," Ms. Carter added.

Ms. Carter resigned from the investigator's job, though. "It was simply too depressing," she said.

A J.S. BACH DOLL appears to be looking over the shoulder of Ruth Carter, the new administrator for the Carmel Bach Festival, while departing administrator Janet Eswein looks on. Mrs. Eswein has been the administrator of the traditional Carmel music festival for the past five years. Ms. Carter comes to Carmel from San Francisco. (Photograph by Joe Livernois.)

She said she is excited about the challenges the Bach Festival is sure to provide. "I definitely feel strongly about promoting this type of program," she said.

Ms. Carter studied music at the university, sings in amateur chorale groups, plays the piano "very poorly" and has "spent a lot of time as a member of various audiences."

Mrs. Eswein said this is the natural time for her to step down from the position. The 1983 festival was the first 21-day program in the history of the festival, which created considerable subscription renewal problems.

When she started more than five years ago, the festival was 17 days long and demand was so intense that the 1983 festival was expanded to 21 days.

And the 1985 festival will undoubtedly be an extended celebration, since 1985 will mark the 300th anniversay of Johann Sebastian Bach. "She'll need a year to break into that," Mrs. Eswein said.

"I'm sure it will be a year before a day passes without a surprise," Ms. Carter said.

Parks become a city issue

By FLORENCE MASON

SPENCERS on the Park? Piccadilly Spencers? Spencers on Dolores? For the first time, the fact that Carmel now has two parks became an issue for the Carmel business license board.

For Jim and Susan Dougherty, owners of Spencers stationery and gift shop on Ocean Avenue, have acquired the space around the corner on Dolores that was previously occupied by the Merry Loom. It is right next door to the new city-owned Piccadilly Park — hence the name, Spencers on the Park.

Questions about the name came up Dec. 15 when both Asst. Police Chief Bob Fischer and Asst. Fire Chief Vern Allred expressed concern about possible confusion as to which park — old established Devendorf or young newcomer Piccadilly — would be implied by the proposed name.

Allred persisted, and cited possible delay in emergency response time. He said he wanted a more specific designation. Fischer said Carmel police officers "will be aware of which park it is. It's better than saying Spencers 1 and Spencers 2 or anything like that."

Building Inspector Butch Maloney added that people eventually will get used to distinguishing between the two parks, while Carmel Planning Commission Chairwoman Sandy Swain said: "I like it the way they proposed it. It has a certain amount of charm."

Asst. Chief Allred referred to the question of response time and said members of the fire department might object to "this new complication." Eventually, however, the board unanimously approved Dougherty's application. Dougherty assured them he would do whatever he could to make it easy to find the new Spencers. Allred said: "Just prevent problems!"

Dougherty told the board they bought the additional space because "we just got cramped." The new Spencers on the Park is already open, with some of the gifts and better quality stationery moved from the original shop.

"Now we can open up the downstairs part of the Ocean Avenue store for more paper goods," Dougherty said. He added that he has talked already to the owners of the neighboring Seven Seas card shop and the Tuck Box about not duplicating their wares.

And the name on the sign above the new store will be Spencers on the Park — Piccadilly Park that is. Or as one member of the license board said: "Sandy's Park," a reference to Sandy Swain's support for Carmel's acquisition of that 4,000 sq. ft. lot on Dolores Street, and its coming development.

BACK AND FORTH

The Marks brothers — Richard and Lee — could use a tunnel under Dolores Street at Seventh Avenue. Owners of the Bully III restaurant since last summer, they have just become the new owners of the Village Market Delicatessen across the street. They acquired just that much of the Village Market complex owned by Jim Groves.

Several members of the Carmel Business License and Code Review Board expressed the hope at the Dec. 15 meeting that the meat market section of the deli would stay as it is. Sandy Swain, planning commission chairwoman, said: "It's very convenient. But these things (resident-oriented businesses) seem to be disappearing, little by little."

Richard Mark replied that they would continue to have many cuts of meat available. "We will buy for that as we do for the restaurant," he said.

The brothers' application for a license was then granted for a "meat market and delicatessen." Carmel Building and Planning Director Bob Griggs commented that if the meat market were discontinued, the license would have to be changed. Mark said: "I don't think we'll end up doing that. We have lots of meat on hand at the Bully III!" Griggs replied: "If you do as well with the deli as you have done with the Bully III, there won't be any problems."

Richard Mark is president and treasurer of the company that owns and operates the House of Prime Rib (Bully III) and now, the Village Market Delicatessen. Lee Mark is vice president and secretary. Both men started at the bottom in the restaurant business. Richard began as a bartender right there at the Bully III, and then was manager. Lee's experience goes back to his "dishwasher days" and more recently includes being manager of the Sardine Factory.

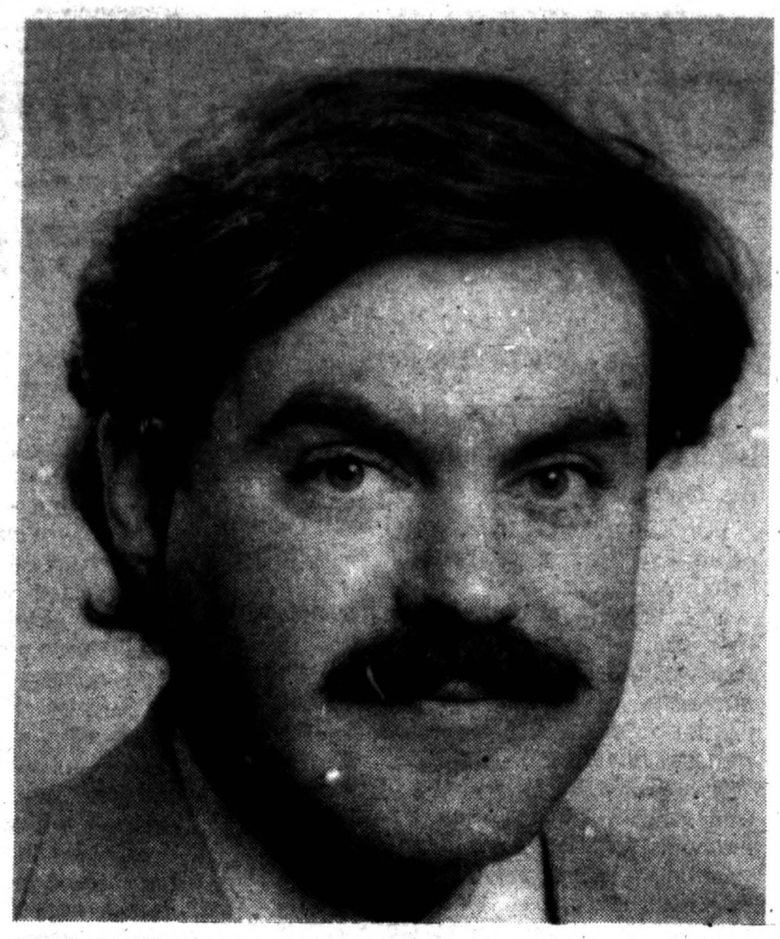
BEDS AND BREAKFASTS

"Bed and breakfast" are words that now seem to go as well together as pins and needles or sugar and spice. The City of Carmel-by-the-Sea does not define any local establishments as such, but there are at least six hostelries in the residential district that seem to meet the generally accepted criteria.

I talked to Bill Patterson at the Stonehouse Inn about these inns, which go back many years in Carmel's history but only recently have begun to be known by the term "bed and breakfast."

Patterson is the general manager of three inns for the Post Companies, with Roger Post as the main owner. Stonehouse Inn, acquired by Post in October of 1981, and two in Pacific Grove — Gosby House and Green Gables — are under Patterson's management, as well as the Petite Auberge in downtown San Francisco, where he usually spends one day each week.

It's "the extra things" these inns do for their guests that define them, Patterson said. "The distinction is service. We meet the comforts of our guests in ways that only smaller places can." At the Stonehouse Inn the extras include not only breakfast, but afternoon tea and sherry.



THE NATIONAL Bank of Carmel has announced the association of David Ellis as mortgage services officer. Ellis, formerly of Wells Fargo Bank, brings more than nine years of financial experience to the bank.

Why is this type of hostelry gaining in popularity? Patterson believes people are tired of getting "just a cold room." He added that the decor is usually different, supporting more of a family atmosphere. "We're opening a home to you, and yet keeping it professional too."

Carmel Building and Planning Director Bob Griggs defines bed and breakfast inns in Carmel as "existing motels in the residential district (R-1) that presently serve at least a Continental breakfast." He said the city has not used that terminology, and emphasized that the city would not allow them to expand.

"We would create an unbalance between tourist interests and the residential character of these neighborhoods. They would cut back on the number of homes available for permanent housing."

So while other peninsula cities wrestle with definitions and regulations, Carmel acknowledges the existence of bed and breakfast inns as "usually single family dwellings renting on a transient basis." As Griggs thus defined them, they would include not only Stonehouse Inn on Eighth Avenue, but also Colonial Terrace and San Antonio House on San Antonio, Holiday House and the Sea View Inn, both on Camino Real, and the Sandpiper on Bayview Avenue.

CHICO IS TAKING OFF

Chico de Rouen is "taking a break" for the first time in nine years. The owner of Chico's Leather Forever in Del Dono Court moved right from a long career in the Army into his own business and has been at it steadily ever since.

Now he and his wife, Karin, are leaving for Europe next month. The store will close and when they return, probably in mid-March, Chico will look for a new location for his shop.

"Chico's will have a new image, too," de Rouen said. He has always combined the sale of leather goods with his work as a leathersmith. Now he wants to emphasize the sale of leather goods and his custom-made items, "instead of repairing things people have bought in other stores."

So there will be new and different items for sale, and Chico will still have his own workshop. Where this will be remains to be seen. "We have some ideas now but they are only tentative," Chico said.

Among the delights of the de Rouens' trip will be a visit with their son, Rico, who studies international relations and

The question is not which stocks you should buy, but which levels of risk you're comfortable with.

DON McLEAN is the winner of the Carmel Board of Realtors' top award for 1983.

German at the University of Gottingen in West Germany.

RESTAURANT ACTION

Carmel resident Teri Lea Nolan has joined Restaurant Action as design director. That was the gist of a press release that landed on my desk last week. Talking to Teri, I learned about an interesting new business on the peninsula, as well as about another delightful working couple in Carmel.

Dan and Teri Nolan came to Carmel two months ago, when Dan was named dining room manager at the newly remodeled Highlands Inn. They came from San Francisco, where Teri's work in interior design focused on the hospitality industry and Dan managed a famous restaurant — Mama's, on Nob Hill.

Teri has projects in Northern California, Nevada and Hawaii to her credit, including coffee shops, elegant dining establishments, bars and lounges, hotel and casino lobbies and public areas. She is also an experienced graphic designer with a degree in interior design from San Jose State and affiliate membership in the Institute of Business Designers.

The company she has just joined — Restaurant Action — is a restaurant consulting firm established in Monterey earlier this year. In addition to its consulting services, Restaurant Action also supplies tabletop items and light restaurant equipment. Daniel Barduzzi is president of the company and Megan Lenders is marketing director.

Teri Nolan will be involved mostly with interior design and decor, including kitchens as well as dining areas. The company also offers venture analysis, quality control, personnel recruitment, financial management and other consultant services.

NAMING NAMES

For the second time in a row, Donald McLean has won the prized plaque for the highest volume of listings sold in 1983, the top award given by the Carmel Board of Realtors.

McLean, who also won an award last year for the highest volume of listings, received his 1983 honors at the board's dinner/dance for inauguration of next year's officers and directors. He is a realtor associate with James Foster and this year also celebrated his 20-year anniversary with the firm.

On the same occasion, Emily Dunn of the Fouratt Corp. was named the winner of the first Nancy Strathmeyer award for outstanding community involvement.

She has been active in the real estate industry 10 years, serving the Carmel Board of Realtors as president, vice president, and a member of numerous committees. Before joining Fouratt, she was with Cross and Foster Realtors.

The latest addition to the staff at the "new" Highlands Inn is Susan Hammer. Vice president and general manager Ronald Matthews announced that Ms. Hammer is director of purchasing. Formerly with The Lodge at Pebble Beach, she graduated from Michigan State University and was affiliated with the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Dearborn, Mich.

Support Systems is the name given to the practice established by Michael Purcell and Kathryn Goldman for treatments by the Feldenkrais method. We told you about that in some detail in a recent column. When Purcell made his formal appearance before the business license board, he summed it up this way: "Our purpose is to help people to learn to use what they have — much better." He cited improvement in the functioning of stroke victims as one example.

GONE — BUT NOT FORGOTTEN

Christmas comes and goes so quickly that a touch of post-Christmas warmth may not be amiss. I can't think of a better way to offer this than the following delightful description of one tree, provided by a friend at Monterey Savings and Loan. The Carmel-by-the-Sea branch is at San Carlos and Sixth and the "character" tree is in the lobby.

ABOUT OUR TREE:

"Nine years ago we planted an evergreen of questionable pedigree in front of our little house, which served as our office until 1979.

"After this building was finished, the house was moved to its present location at Second and Torres where it reposes as a private residence once again.

"In the process of moving, our little tree was destroyed by an overzealous bulldozer operator.

"One pine cone was saved and the seeds planted in a styrofoam coffee cup. Of the seven seeds planted, one took hold and the little seed grew into the tree you see before you.

"It still has a questionable pedigree, and in place of symmetrical elegance it has "character," but it is ours and we love it.

"A live tree is a wonderful way to mark this most joyous time of the year. Our 'character' tree has history, tradition and love behind it and that's what Christmas in Carmel and throughout the world is all about."

One place where Christmas sales were brisk: the Christmas Fair at Community Hospital. The "perfectly elegant" fair, which featured lingerie from the hospital's gift shop and gift laden tables around the fountain, attracted more than 1,000 guests and grossed $16,500. It was all done by the hospital's auxiliary, with Carmelite Marion Robotti in charge, and the proceeds bolster the support that the Auxiliary gives the hospital throughout the year.

And a final Christmas note: Bruce and Olive Grimes, genial proprietors of the Seven Seas card shop (gifts, too) celebrated their 29th Christmas season on Dolores Street.

Olive said that one of the nicest things about this time of the year is that most of their customers are Carmel residents. "We see it from the checks that come in," she said, "and we know almost everyone who walks in."

The Carmel Business Association will have its breakfast meeting at 8 a.m. Jan. 5 at the Studio Theatre. Computers will be discussed by Jim Clark of Computerland. This program will be designed to answer questions on whether a business or home should have a computer, and what will the computer do for you or your business.

The public is invited. Coffee and rolls will be available.

Rowntrees have 50th anniversary

By SUSAN CAROL CANTRELL

ENTER: a steep winding climb through the Carmel Highlands. Arrival: at last, at a 1932 ranch-style home perched like a bird atop a cliff.

A spreading buckeye tree, planted by Lester Rowntree, well-known writer and botanist, and an assortment of cats and dogs welcome the weary wayfarer.

"We're beginning to think about moving down from here," said Harriette L. Rowntree, whose husband Cedric Rowntree concurred.

They spoke of the inaccessability of the area and how a recent bout with the flu brought this sentiment to light. However, they said all the neighbors are friendly and "help one another in times of problems." And as a volunteer for the Carmel Highlands Fire Department, Cedric has been especially helpful, as he has answered every call there for the past 12 years.

The occasion for my interview was the couple's 50th wedding anniversary on Dec. 27, and a look into their lives and happy marriage.

The duo lists several ingredients for their successful union, such as mutual support, independence, hard work and "never getting too serious." In response to a question about how his wife has changed over the years, Cedric said: "Maintenance is good but turn-in value is nothing!" To which Harriette countered with: "We couldn't afford a divorce." She added another plus was poor retention. "We forget what we got mad at!" And there ends the fight.

The Rowntrees have definitely been busy over the years with civic affairs as well as a family. Their two sons — Lester and Rowan — have doctorate degrees and work in environmental capacities, and their daughter Patricia has five children, one of whom attends Carmel High School.

The children did not, however, attend the reception, given by the Rowntree's good neighbor Pat Donovan at the Lucille Huntington home (formerly W.W. Wheelers) of Pebble Beach, as their parents urged them to "save their money and visit this summer when they can spend more time."

Cedric said that the entire family (which includes nine grandchildren, two of whom were born in the Rowntree home) is "deeply in conservation." "Grandma Rowntree imbued her grandchildren with her concern for the environment," said Harriette. "We were already there, Cedric and I, and I think we get some of the credit too."

Cedric owes his affiliation with conservation to a New Jersey farm upbringing. Harriette grew up in the country town of Atascadero, Calif.

Cedric is a birthright Quaker, born at Hackensack, N.J. in 1911, and while neither is an active Quaker anymore, his wife said: "As you know, Quakers give service wherever they're needed." The seeds of his long career of service were planted in Carmel, where his family moved in 1925 and where Cedric claims membership in the "Southwest Carmel Gang," which included Al Durney, John Rockwell, and from the Carmel Point Bain Reamer and Bill Dickinson.

He also was a member of the Carmel Boys' Club, organized and sponsored by Ida Johnson and Josephine Culbertson, who were founders and fosterers of many of Carmel's literary, civic and artistic endeavors. They just happened to have a niece by the name of Harriette Hasty.

It was in their home, "Grey Gables," where the boys' club, as well as Cedric and Harriette, met. (The famous home was eventually split three ways and moved to difference locations in Carmel where three difference families dwell.)

WHEN CEDRIC'S family moved to the Carmel Highlands in 1926, he had to have a car in order to attend Monterey High School, so he purchased a model-T Ford pickup, and soon after bought a nine-year-old horse from Lynn Hodges of Hodges Stables for $8.

THE ROWNTREES now reside in the home which Lester Rowntree, famous area naturalist, had built. (Susan Cantrell photos.)

CEDRIC and Harriette Rowntree, who recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary, relaxed on the deck of their Carmel Highlands home.

He took time off from high school to work on ranches and finally graduated in 1931 at the age of 20. After a half year at Cal Aggies (U.C. Davis) he worked with his father, Bernard Rowntree, in his real estate and insurance office in Carmel, known as Carmel Properties Co. He remembers that Mr. Walker's shoeshine was next door to them and the man had to come into their office to use the toilet. (Seems a scarcity of toilets always has existed in Carmel.)

Another fond memory was of playing Abalone Baseball, a unique softball game started on Carmel Point by a resident named Charlie Van Ryper. Ernie Morehouse was the team pitcher and Jimmie Kelsey was a player.

Other memories include the "men-about-town," Ranny Cockburn of the Pine Cone and Jack Jordan of Pine Inn. He also helped his father, who did the lights at the Forest Theatre for a production of the home-written, home-acted Carmel Follies. That play included a fictitious member of the Tom Work family who, being born the ninth child, was named "Quits" because when he was born his parents said: "Let's call it quits."

Cedric left Carmel in May of 1933 to join the Civilian Conservation Corps and went to camp in Del Norte County outside Crescent City. He took an unauthorized Christmas leave to marry Harriette Hasty. "It was marry or sin in those days, and being good Quakers, we decided to marry," Cedric said. He then returned to camp until June of 1934, where the two "manned" a fire lookout for the summer. Following in their footsteps, both of the Rowntree's sons experienced honeymoons in lookouts.

Harriette recounted the frustration of those Depression days, when her mother had to sell household items and antiques "just to feed us," she recalled. And how when Harriette suggested that she would be married in her brown suit, her mother said: "Married in brown, live on the town. No daughter of mine will be married in brown!" Thereafter, she was offered a lovely piece of embroidered Chinese silk by her Aunt Josie, which was fashioned into a gown.

The Rowntrees returned to Carmel in 1935 with their first son, Rowan, and Cedric worked in the Carmel Post Office from 1936 to 1942. The postmasters were Irene Cator and Ernest Bixler.

He then began his long history of firefighting with the Carmel Volunteer Fire Department under Chief Robert Leidig. Fred Mylar was his direct supervisor both in the post office and the fire department, which made it quite convenient to answer calls from the post office.

He was assigned to the Rescue and Salvage Company, and later to the first Carmel Red Cross ambulance stationed with the fire department in 1937. Until a new truck was purchased, he drove one with no windshield. Cedric also became an instructor in first aid for the Red Cross, and after the war started he would drive to Big Sur to teach an evening class with only blackout lights on the car.

His father, who shared a small house with early Mayor Perry Newberry, was a Carmel City Council member and was the fire commissioner at the time the present fire station was built. He was also secretary and engineer for the Carmel Sanitary District, and Cedric worked at the sanitary disposal plant on weekends for extra income. He and his wife had a victory garden with plenty of free fertilizer. "What vegetables we had, with tomato plants sprouting everywhere out of the fertilizer," he recalled. Their present home, which Lester Rowntree had built in 1932, also has a vegetable garden and a native plant garden, which "Harriette tends."

IN 1943, the couple moved to the San Francisco Bay Area, where their principle residence was Berkeley, from 1945 to 1960. During this time Harriette was active in the community with Cub Scouts, church and PTA and her volunteer activities with teenagers led her to take a paid position as teenage coordinator for the Berkeley Recreation Department, a job she held for eight years. She was also a member of the Berkeley Mayor's Council of Youth, the Berkeley Council of Social Welfare, and the Berkeley-Albany PTA.

In 1970, the Rowntrees returned to the Carmel Highlands, where they added on to Lester Rowntree's modest home, and cared for her until her death at age 100 in the year 1979.

"It was hard caring for her here and we're thinking of moving now because we don't want to impose that on our children," Mrs. Rowntree said. She added that Lester will be remembered — among other things — for the Lester Rowntree Arboretum, named for her, in Mission Trials Park, Carmel.

Cedric summed up his 50-year association with the fire service by recalling the first forest fire he fought in the summer of 1933 to his present capacity as a member of the board of directors of the Carmel Highlands Fire Protection District.

He retired in 1977 after 19 years with the California State Department of Education as an assistant supervisor of fire service training. Before that, he spent 16 years as a member of three different municipal fire departments. After retirement, he was a volunteer with the Carmel Highlands Fire Department until the fall of 1983.

"I decided to quit before I hurt somebody. There's nothing worse than an over-aged fireman," he said. And Harriette added that she had provided some incentive of late also. "I got tired of being awakened at 2 a.m. It was the fire at the Highlands Inn that capitulated everything. He was gone from midnight to 6 a.m.!"

Cedric is now active with the docent program of the Point Lobos Natural History Association, where he was docent administrator from February of 1982 to October of 1983, and is also a volunteer driver for the Carmel Foundation.

Harriette's involvement in community affairs has paralleled her husband's, and, as she stated, probably aided in the understanding and preservation of their marital status.

She recounted that her family members have lived in Carmel and have been active in community life since 1906, when her aunts Josephine Culbertson and Ida Johnson established residence here.

Harriette graduated from Atascadero High School in 1928, yet spent most summers in Carmel. Her brother Henry Hasty graduated from Monterey High School and her sister, Hope Hasty, was the first secretary for the Carmel Foundation. Harriette was influential in organizing the first cooperative nursery school on the Monterey Peninsula, which was located in Carmel.

A doer, she also organized the women's division of the local Civil Defense unit early in 1941 and was its executive secretary until she moved to Berkeley in 1944. After she left that town in 1960, she served as chairwoman of the youth program for the Contra Costa County Volunteer Bureau, and was also a member of the Danville Citizens Committee which was responsible for developing a master plan for that city.

When the couple returned to Carmel in 1971, she became active with Volunteers In Action on the Monterey Peninsula and served as its volunteer director until funds were secured for a paid executive.

Her abiding dedication to help the youth of the area has led her to serve as a consultant to the Carmel Mayor's Ad Hoc Committee on Recreation, and her interest in the environment has led her to become vice president of the Monterey Bay Chapter of the California Native Plant Society and chairwoman of the Carmel Arboretum Citizens' Committee.

Harriette has many concerns about the future, especially for our youth. "There's not enough recreation, teachers are tired, there is no communication. Organizations only build dynasties anymore," she said. But on a more hopeful note, she said: "Parents are beginning to get back into the mainstream now and realize that they must support programs for young people."

And so this energetic pair continues to work in the community and to pursue their love of nature — whether tending their gardens or viewing migratory whales from their panoramic deck. They also want to pass along their convictions and insights to posterity.

"I'm not shy," Harriette said. "We want our offspring to know their heritage."

equipment Christmas Day trying to stabilize the banks.

Public works department policy forbids crews from taking emergency action to stop damage to private property. But the Corps had removed a sandbar and gravel in the channel that normally protects the Dyer property in an effort to make room for the diversion.

And while it was the Corps' work, the county is still liable.

I'M NOT SURE why we were out there," Wilson said. "It was not our job, obviously, but no one else was within shouting distance. No one from the Corps was within 40 miles and it was something that had to be done right now. It was the hateful county out there."

Still, the property along Mrs. Dyer's home lost four trees to the river, Wilson said.

As of Tuesday afternoon, Wilson has not been able to contact any Corps official who knows what will be done next near the Boronda Bridge.

Efforts by the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook to contact Corps officials also were fruitless. Clifford Vrooman, who is the project manager of the Boronda Bridge riprap project, was out of the office and not expected back until "next year."

As of Tuesday, the river was too high to start any channel work anyway, Wilson said.

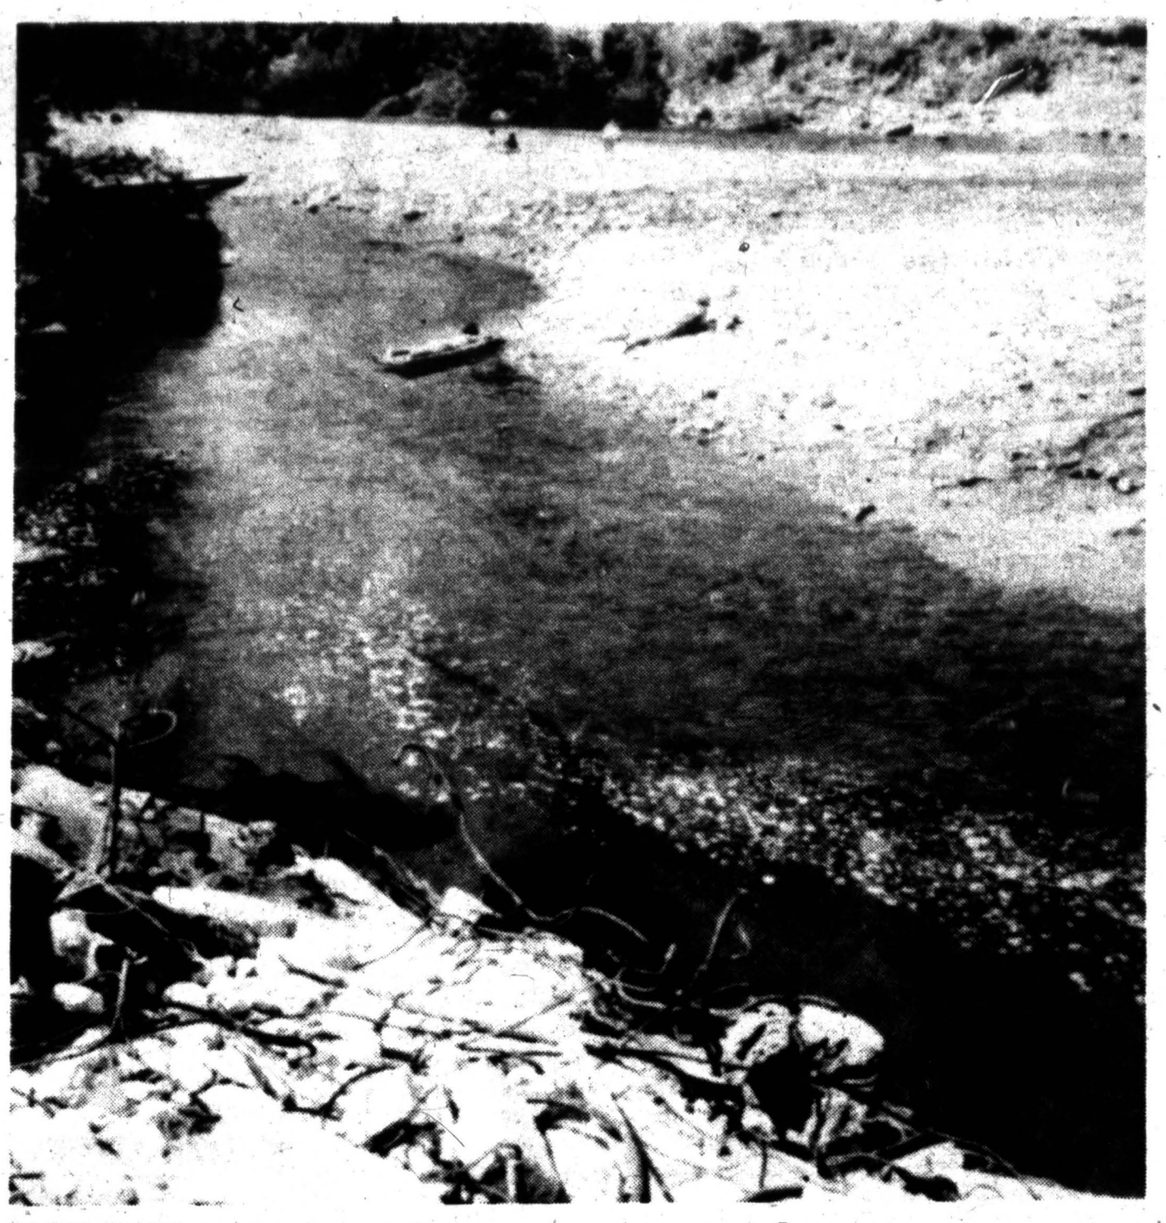
But if the weather reports are correct, he said, the river should subside and work in the river could continue later this week.

Nevertheless, neighbors in the area are still angry that the project was not completed months ago. They said riverbank stabilization projects are usually started when there is little water flow in the river so that problems — such as those that have plagued the corps project at Boronda Bridge this year — are avoided.

Earlier in the project, the diversionary dam constructed to divert the flow away from heavy equipment washed out after a rainstorm.

Wilson told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook that the riprap in place along the abutment to the Boronda Bridge "looks like it's doing a good job."

The bridge is the only connecting link between Garzas Road and Carmel Valley Road. About 300 persons live on the south side of the bridge.



SAND BARS in the Carmel River often divert the flow of the water against river banks downstream. Residents near the Boronda Bridge maintain that a sandbar similar to the one pictured above diverts water against the bridge abutment and has caused erosion that threatens the abutment.

Jim Yates is first applicant for vacant trustee position on Carmel school board

Businessman Jim Yates of Carmel Highlands, an unsuccessful candidate in the November election, is the first applicant for the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education seat to be vacated by trustee Joan Cathey Jan. 1.

The school board has announced that applications for the trustee post will be accepted until 5 p.m. Jan. 3. Applications are available at all school sites or at the district office, south side of Carmel Valley Road about one mile east of Highway 1.

The only requirement is that the candidate live within the boundaries of the Carmel Unified School District.

Trustees are to interview the candidates at 15-minute intervals during a special session at 7 p.m. Jan. 5 in the library on the Carmel Middle School campus adjacent to the district office.

A decision on a new school board member is expected to be made during the regular school board meeting at 7 p.m. Jan. 9 in the middle school library.

Although several people have obtained applications, Yates was the first to return a completed form. Yates finished fifth in the Nov. 8 balloting behind new trustees Susan Bromfield, Pat Condren and Robert Fenton and unsuccessful candidate William McCormick.

CHS student wins honor

CARMEL HIGH School senior Lisa Radon (center) has received the Daughters of the American Revolution Good Citizenship Award. Miss Radon was honored for her leadership, dependability and patriotism. She received a $25 prize and is eligible to enter the statewide competition. Padre runnersup in the contest were Mike Kelly (left) and David Woodward.

Carmel council to push for 'trigger' devices

THE CARMEL City Council plans a renewed effort to get "trigger mechanisms" included in the Carmel Valley Master Plan.

The council Dec. 20 authorized city staff to prepare a written program on the devices for presentation to the Monterey County Planning Commission, which is to begin hearings on the Carmel Valley Master Plan early next year.

City Atty. George Brehmer, City Administrator Doug Schmitz and Assistant Planning Director Diane White were to meet yesterday (Dec. 28) to develop the proposed plan. Details were unavailable because the meeting was held after deadline.

A "trigger mechanism" is a device which would halt development in the Valley when adverse environmental effects threaten.

For example, one such proposed trigger mechanism would restrict growth once water availablity is limited or sewage capacity is reached. Some other areas subject to trigger mechanisms are traffic, air pollution and noise.

The city-authored program to be developed Wednesday is to propose the specifics of the trigger mechanism — when water availablity is limited, when there is not enough sewer capacity or too many cars or too much pollution, Brehmer told the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook Dec. 24.

Additionally, the city-proposed program will include suggested courses of action should growth induce the "trigger mechanism" in any of the areas.

The concept of trigger mechanisms in the Carmel Valley Master Plan is not new, nor is this the first time the city has expressed an interest in the proposal, Brehmer said.

The city and the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association asked supervisors to incorporate trigger mechanisms in the final environmental impact report for the Carmel Valley Master Plan.

Those requests were denied by supervisors, who adopted the EIR in 1982 and established a special citizens advisory committee to prepare a draft Carmel Valley Master Plan.

Supervisors said inclusion of two staff reports in the EIR "adequately addresses" the triggering mechanism concept.

However, Brehmer is confident that supervisors are willing to once again listen to the idea of trigger mechanisms in the Carmel Valley Master Plan itself rather than the EIR.

BREHMER BASES his confidence, in part, on a portion of a resolution approved by supervisors that certified the EIR. Supervisors discounted claims that many of the environmental standards, such as noise and air pollution, have already been reached. But the board did leave itself open to new talks on trigger mechanisms.

"The board rejects a mechanical undebated response to the fact that some environmental standard has been exceeded and therefore rejects triggering mechanisms as such," supervisors said in the resolution certifying the master plan EIR.

"However, the board and planning commission will consider periodical evaluation of the Carmel Valley Master Plan when it is considered for adoption."

The city council believes that the triggering mechanisms will have a mitigating effect on uncontrolled growth in Carmel Valley.

It was a court order spurred by a city of Carmel lawsuit that forced supervisors to revise the Carmel Valley Master Plan and adopt the EIR. The council's contention was that the county should have prepared an EIR for the master plan prior to adoption of the plan.

The following poem was deposited, anonymously, at the Carmel Police Department last week.

"To the Carmel Police Department from a grateful gray squirrel:

'Twas the week before Christmas when tail all aswirl
Down the chimney there tumbled a little gray squirrel.
It scattered the ash as it raced through the house
Stirring havoc unlike its still cousin the mouse.
It knocked over vases, pot-plants were a shambles,
As it tore through the house intent on its gambols.
To the kitchen it ran where the cookies this Yule
Were laid out on trays, the better to cool.
One leap and a look, and to feasting it fell
While it thought of the tale it later could tell.
Then the family came home and called on the police
To help calm it down and make its release.
But the squirrel was so frightened by then and so scared.
That it couldn't perceive that the police really cared.
But finally they cornered it down on the floor
And managed at last to show it the door."

Dr. Rudolph Kocher

Private funeral services have taken place for Dr. Rudolph Kocher, a retired Carmel physician who founded the clinic that later became the Community Hospital, who died Dec. 17 at Beverly Manor Convalescent Hospital. He was 100.

Born Nov. 4, 1883 in San Jose, he started his medical practice in San Diego in 1922. Five years later he moved to Carmel, where he practiced until his retirement in 1964. There were only two doctors in Carmel when Dr. Kocher arrived, and on one occasion he was forced to ride a horse bareback to make a call in Carmel Valley.

He graduated from Stanford University and Johns Hopkins Medical School before he set off to Munich, Germany, for postgraduate studies. He shoveled coal aboard ship to pay his passage across the Atlantic.

During World War II, he served as chief of medical services at 203rd General Hospital in Paris, and rose to the rank of colonel. During his career he conducted research in nutrition and cancer.

He opened the Grace Deere Velie Metabolic Clinic in Carmel — named after an heir to the farm implement fortune — in 1930, for the woman who contributed a portion of her fortune to the clinic. It was closed in 1934, a victim of the Depression, and reopened later as a 40-bed hospital.

He was a member of the American Rhododendron Society and the Carmel Music Society.

Survivors include his two daughters, Sibyl Mitchell of Menlo Park and June Harner of Monterey; eight grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

The family suggests memorial contributions to Community Hospital.

Catherine Davis

Memorial services took place Dec. 21 at St. Dunstan's Episcopal Church in Carmel Valley for Catherine S. Davis, a resident of Carmel Valley, who died Dec. 17 at Community Hospital after a period of failing health.

She was born Aug. 2, 1909 in New York City, and had been a peninsula resident for four months. She moved to the area from San Jose and Los Gatos, where she had lived for 25 years.

Before she retired in 1974, she was employed by GTE of California.

Survivors include her daughter, Susan Wallace of Carmel Valley; a brother, Robert Scopinich Sr., of Shingle Springs; and one grandson.

The Rev. James Brock officiated at the services. Cremation took place at the Little Chapel-by-the-Sea, with the Paul Mortuary in charge of arrangements.

The family suggests contributions to the American Parkinson's Disease Association, 147 E. 50th St., New York, N.Y. 10022.

William Millis

Funeral services took place Dec. 16 at the Episcopal Church of Our Savior in Mill Valley for William A. Millis, a retired journalist, labor activist and former Monterey Peninsula resient, who died Dec. 8 at Ross General Hospital in Ross, Marin County. He was 66.

He was born Aug. 1, 1917 in Indianapolis, Ind. and moved with his family to Carmel in 1927. He attended local schools and was a 1938 graduate of Stanford University.

He worked as a reporter from 1938 until the outbreak of World War II, then went to work for the Office of War Information in San Francisco.

After the war, he spent four years in Washington, D.C., as managing editor of the CIO News, then returned to the San Francisco area as a reporter for the San Francisco News and, for 16 years, with the San Francisco Examiner. He retired in 1973.

He was a member of the San Francisco-Oakland Newspaper Guild, both as an officer of the local and as a member of its executive board.

Survivors include his wife, Elizabeth; daughters, Karen Mansergh of Sebastopol and Charlotte Potter of Stourbridge, England; and sister, Mrs. Russell Leavenworth of Santa Cruz.

Burial took place at Mount Tamalpais Cemetery, with the Russell and Gooch Funeral Chapel in charge of arrangements.

The family suggests memorial contributions to the Nature Conservancy, 156 Second St., San Francisco.

Hal C. Wright

Private family services have taken place for Hal C. Wright, a retired advertising executive who died Dec. 15 at his daughter's home in Carmel Valley. He was 85.

Born Aug. 27, 1898 in Orion, Ill., he was a resident of Hacienda Carmel and had lived in the peninsula area since retirement 20 years ago. He was associated with the International Harvester Co. for more than 40 years.

He served in the Army in World War I and during World War II was the civilian liaison between the Navy and International Harvester, and established programs for training in the care of heavy equipment at schools on the East Coast.

He was a former board member at Hacienda Carmel and was a member of the Monterey Elks Lodge, American Legion, Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club and the Rolling Green Country Club at Arlington Heights, Ill.

Survivors include his daughter, Ginnie W. Drew of Carmel Valley; three grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Cremation took place at the Little Chapel by-the-Sea followed by ashes scattered at sea, under the direction of the Paul Mortuary.

The family suggests memorial gifts to the Hospice of the Monterey Peninsula.

Benjamin Cory

Cremation took place at the Little Chapel by-the-Sea for Benjamin Hyde Cory, a former Carmel resident who died Dec. 14 at Stanford University Hospital after a period of failing health. He was 87.

Born Oct. 25, 1896 in Fresno, he maintained a home in Carmel from 1938 until 1979, when he moved to Menlo Park.

He was a 1919 graduate of Princeton University, where he was a member of the Elm Club.

He served with the Princeton-Yale Ambulance Unit of the American Field

Father Farrell's wisdom

Prevent family fireworks

From the Dec. 30, 1983 Carmel Pine Cone/CV Outlook

A year ago I visited Mexico for the Fiesta de Nuestra Senora de Guadalupe. I stayed on for Christmas and the feast of Los Tres Reyes (Epiphany).

There was an abundance of colored lights, Posadas and Pastorelas with songs and costumes from the 16th and 17th Centuries, but most spectacular, were the "Fuegas artificiales." The fireworks were as spectacular and as dangerous as only Mexicans can make them.

Perhaps our local homes, instead of holly wreaths with Tom Brown's "peace," should have wreaths with the words "dangerous explosives within." For example, "peace" reigns until dad finds out that mother has given his favorite easy chair and worn-out slippers to Goodwill and replaced them with new ones.

The explosion is heard all the way to Chualar. The females of the family have decided that peace on earth to men of good will does not apply to them. The angels did not sing peace to persons so the admonition excludes them. The household is anything but a "silent night."

The list of potential explosions goes on and on with naggers, pouters, and agitators who set off quarrels and sit back to enjoy the bursting rockets that light up the sky. It is not the star of Bethlehem.

Oh, Christ Child of peace in your humble crib grant our homes true and lasting peace and tranquility. Deliver us from all family fireworks. It takes such a small spark to ignite them. Oh Lord, help us to keep your love and kindness aglow in our homes these holidays and throughout 1983. Only you can supply us with this kind of fire insurance at the right premium. Amen.

Service, attached to the French and American armies in France during World War I. He was awarded the American Field Service Medal and Victory Medal for his participation.

After graduating from Harvard Law School in 1922, he practiced in Fresno until the late 1920s, when he took over management of family interests there.

He was a member of the Monterey Peninsula Country Club, the Beach and Tennis Club, the Sunnyside Country Club and the Downtown Club of Fresno.

His wife, Susan, to whom he had been married 52 years, died in 1978.

Survivors include daughters, Carolyn Ahrens and Edelen Cory Stevens, both of Menlo Park; and five grandchildren.

Inurnment took place at the Monterey City Cemetery. The Paul Mortuary was in charge of arrangements.

Denton Rebok

Memorial services took place Dec. 17 at the Monterey Peninsula Seventh-day Adventist Church for Denton Edward Rebok, who died Dec. 11 in Hendersonville, N.C., after a long illness. He was 86.

Born April 7, 1897 in Newberg, Pa., he concluded a long teaching career as an instructor in world affairs at Robert Louis Stevenson School from 1961-70. He moved from Pebble Beach in 1975.

A 1917 graduate of Washington Missionary College, he was ordained as a Seventh-day Adventist minister and spent the next 23 years as a missionary in China, where he was a pioneer in vocational education and co-educational teaching.

He wrote several books in Chinese and was honored by Congress for his research into the Ming Dynasty.

He received his master's degree from Columbia University and served after his return from China as a professor at Washington Missionary College, president of Southern Junior College in Tennessee and president of the Seventh-day Adventist Theolgical Seminary in Washington, D.C.

He was both general secretary and general field secretary of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists in the mid-1950s.

Survivors include his wife, Marie Burrows; son, Edward of Modesto; daughter, Jean Heinrich of San Jose; six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Dr. Edward Heppenstall officiated at the services. Inurnment took place at Mission Memorial Park.

The family suggests memorial contributions to the Voice of Prophecy in Thousand Oaks or to the Monterey Peninsula Adventist Junior Academy, 1025 Mescal St., Seaside.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

According to Yue-Sai Kan, the Chinese-American hostess of a national cable television show called "Looking East," the people of modern China still regard the process of growing older as a very positive experience. "Age is revered in China," she said, "so neither men nor women are unhappy about being in the middle-aged group."

Three of America's favorite entertainers reached milestone birthdays this year. Bob Hope was treated to a number of parties around the nation to celebrate his 80th, while Jimmy Stewart returned to his hometown of Indiana, Pennsylvania to be honored on his 75th birthday. The "youngster" of the trio was comedian Red Skelton, who was still working hard when he turned 70.

How nations communicate

By JAMES RESTON
N.Y. Times News Service

ONE OF the many silly things about this so-called Age of Communication is that the leaders of hostile nations seldom use the new inventions to speak to one another.

For example, the governments of the United States and the Soviet Union have a safe and instant "hot line" that runs between Moscow and Washington via Africa and other places. But even during the two or three hours of confusion before the wayward Korean airliner was shot down, nobody turned the darned thing on.

Most folks who have a telephone know to call 911 if they hear a scary rattle at the door or smell smoke in the night, but all these great communicators in Washington and Moscow, with all their magic gadgets, use them mainly for propaganda and not for diplomacy.

They have invented a new triangular communications game. They don't talk privately to one another but shout publicly at each other through the news media. It's not a role we sought or are good at, but we're in the middle and probably part of the problem.

Then there's the jet airplane. It's a wonderful machine but a mixed blessing. It flies above the turbulent clouds and press. It has kitchens up front, and beds more comfortable than the old railroad drawing cars, and when the great men get off in the morning the bands are playing.

It is both a useful convenience, which brought the leaders of Israel and Lebanon to Washington recently, and a means of escape. It has clearly diminished the influence of ambassadors. For when anything really important happens, some superstar flies off from Washington to take charge, thus relieving his ambassador of much authority or influence.

Then, in this gloomy catalogue of the contributions of science to the failure of diplomacy, we come to the photocopying machine. After one and silent meditation, considering what these mechanical idiots are copying most of the time, I have come to the sad conclusion that in the State Department, as they say in their gentle way, these machines are not very helpful.

For example, what if by chance the president's ambassador in Beirut or some brave ambassador in Central America wanted to send the president a private message saying: "Skipper, in my judgment you're running into a buzzsaw"? How would he get it through the photocopying machines?

Would he dare try? He would surely be prudent enough to think that his "eyes only" cable for the president would not be read first, if ever by the president but be run through the copying machines and distributed with the thought that maybe he didn't agree with everything the president was doing.

SO WHAT? So the ambassador, with all these wonderful instruments of communication, takes no chance but goes out to lunch.

It would be wrong to assume that the scientific development of communications is going against freedom. Quite the opposite. The East Germans now watch West German television every night. Ditto the Czechs in Prague.

The president of Israel, Chaim Herzog, was in Washington the other day. And he was talking philosphy and history, not politics, which he left to his prime minister, Yitzhak Shamir.

But maybe Herzog's quiet thoughts were more important than Shamir's negotiations for more military aid.

Herzog talked privately about the power of communications. It was now possible to see Israeli television in Jordan, and even for him to watch Yasser Arafat's press conference in Damascus.

All this would change things, Herzog said. I had heard the same thing from Helmut Schmidt and Willy Brandt in West Germany. Namely that there was no way to stop this drift and expansion of information, or to stop it from seeping through the Iron Curtain.

Maybe before long it will be possible to have worldwide television that could not be jammed, so that the Soviet people would see that there were other ways to live in a world not as hostile as they have been told by Tass and Pravda. But that's probably a long way off.

There's a crisis in U.S.-Soviet relations for the moment, but it's probably not as serious as it sounds. One of the most hopeful signs, despite all this talk about electronic propaganda, is that the Soviet leader sat down the other day and wrote a personal letter to Chancellor Kohl in West Germany.

This is what Abraham Lincoln used to do when he was fussing with his political opponents. He didn't have a hot line but only a quill pen. President Reagan would do well to go back and read Lincoln's calm letters appealing for reconciliation. They were very good and are worth recalling in our present troubles.

'Tis the season for whale watching

By ANNE PAPINEAU

BY LAND or by sea, now is the time to scan the ocean's edge for a glimpse of the annual gray whale parade.

Thousands of the barnacle-encrusted mammals complete the 4,000 to 6,000 mile journey from the icy arctic to breeding grounds in shallow lagoons along the west coast of Baja California.

The geography of the central coast makes the Monterey Peninsula an excellent place to undertake whale spotting, according to Alan Baldridge, librarian at Hopkins Marine Station in Pacific Grove.

"Whales don't follow every indentation of the shoreline," he said. "The whales set their point at Cypress Point (Pebble Beach) and then they leave the coastline until Davenport (northward in Santa Cruz County)."

As many as 200 a day may pass this way, travelling in pods or groups of two to 10. The herd is believed to total 12,000 to 15,000, up from only 250 that survived overfishing by 1946.

When they reach their winter quarters in warm-water lagoons, the pregnant females give birth to calves they carried for 12 months since the winter before. Females who bred two years ago and have weaned their babies mate again.

Good places for viewing the migration are elevated locations that permit a view of the entire whale silhouette under water, rather than just a spout, a back or an occasional tail.

Superior viewing locations include Point Pinos in Pacific Grove, Cypress Point, Point Lobos State Reserve on Highway 1 south of Carmel, and Yankee and Soberanes points farther south.

While gray whales were observed passing this area in October, the oceanic traffic jam should peak in early January.

Persons interested in catching the show can join a whale watch scheduled to meet at 2 p.m. each Sunday during January and February at the Soberanes Point coastal access turnout on Highway 1. The turnout is located 5.2 miles south of Point Lobos State Reserve on Highway 1.

A Garrapata State Park ranger will oversee the whale watchers and be available to answer questions. Bring warm clothing, camera, guidebooks and binoculars to enjoy the outing, and leave pets at home. For more information about this watch, call Pfeiffer Big Sur State Park, 667-2315.

AT POINT Lobos State Reserve on Highway 1 just south of Carmel, volunteers have set up telescopes to assist whale watchers. A trailer in the Cypress Grove parking lot also contains some information about the annual migration.

A variety of commercial whale watching boats departs from Fisherman's Wharf in Monterey each winter. These include:

• Chris' Fishing Trips: two-hour excursions, adults: $8; children: $5. Group and charter rates available. Skippers offer some commentary on sights. For reservations, call 375-5951.

• Monterey Sport Fishing: one and one-half and two-hour excursions depart 11 a.m., 1 and 3 p.m., adults: $8; children: $5. Special group and senior citizen rates. Beginning Jan. 1 the 100-foot Princess Monterey will be available for whale watchers. For reservations, call 372-2628.

• Randy's Fishing Trips: one and one-half hour trips depart daily, adults: $8; children: $5; two and one-half to three hour trips depart weekends, adults: $20; children: $15. Weekend trips narrated by naturalists David Shonman and Milos Radakovich. Charter trips and group rates available by arrangement. Call 372-7440.

• Sam's Fishing Fleet: one and one-half hour tours narrated by skippers, adults: $8; children: $5. For reservations, call 372-0577.

Sam's also offers three and six-hour whale watching tours led by naturalist Debra Shearwater. Three-hour tour price, adults: $20; children: $10; six-hour tour price, $30. Longer tours include explanation of the Monterey Bay submarine canyon, bird watching, whale lore and dolphin search. For information, call Debra Shearwater at 425-8111.

Gateway School in Santa Cruz presents its fifth annual "Day with the Whales Fund-raiser" Jan. 13 and 14. It begins with a 7 p.m. whale watching lecture Jan. 13 at Gateway School, 420 Melrose Ave., Santa Cruz. The excursion will take place 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Jan. 14 aboard the Pacific Princess, which leaves from Monterey Sport Fishing. Marine biologist Roger Helm will embellish the journey.

Tickets are available weekdays or by writing the school. The tax deductible price for both events is $14 for adults and $6 for children.

The University of California Extension through UC Santa Cruz will present a Jan. 22 whale watching trip. This trip also originates from Fisherman's Wharf in Monterey. For more information contact the extension office, Carriage House, Santa Cruz, 95064.

Private individuals who plan to watch whales from boats or airplanes are restricted by the National Marine Fisheries Service to minimum distances away from the mammals.

Ships can move no faster than the speed whales travel and no closer than 100 yards away from them, and should not be used to herd or drive animals.

Airplanes must remain at least 1,000 feet above whales when flying within a horizontal distance of 100 yards from the mammals.

Failure to observe these guidelines can result in fines of up to $20,000 and a term of up to one year in jail for harassing the animals.

Violations can be reported to the National Marine Fisheries Service in Santa Rosa.

A guide for your New Year's parties, dining

Ring in 1984 with a flourish

SHOWS, dinners and parties both intimate and lavish can be found on all points of the Monterey Peninsula this New Year's Eve. Let this be your guide to a celebration custom-tailored to your idea of ringing in 1984 with a festive flourish.

At the Hyatt Del Monte, One Old Golf Course Road, Monterey, New Year's Eve can be celebrated on a major scale. The "Hyattfest" begins at 7:30 p.m. with a reception that includes champagne and canapes. Gourmet cuisine and theatrical dessert accent the 8:30 p.m. dinner, with dancing enlivening the scene from 9 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. Serious partyers can anticipate the synchronized countdown, which is initiated by the 11 p.m. distribution of party favors.

The whole thing costs $60, including tax and gratuity. For the party-weary, guest rooms will be available at the special rate of $60, single or double occupancy. Embark on a road to recovery with champagne continental breakfast in your room or the New Year's Day Feast, $12.95 per person. For reservations, call 372-7171, or if you're reading this in New York, (800) 228-9000.

An "Extravaganza" is how the folks at Studio Theatre Restaurant describe a celebration that includes human and duckling roasts. The evening opens with a special New Year's Eve dinner to include roast duckling cassis with wild rice and complimentary champagne. Watch the hit comedy My Three Angels on the Studio Theatre stage. Straight from San Francisco will be comedienne and impressionist Constance Fisher, who may do her Dolly Parton imitation or Marilyn Monroe or other off-the-wall antics.

BAY AREA comedienne and impressionist Constance Fisher lights up the stage of the Studio Theatre Restaurant in Carmel during a special New Year's Eve extravaganza. In addition to comedy and the closing performance of My Three Angels, the evening includes complimentary champagne and a roast duckling cassis dinner. For information or reservations, call the Studio Theatre, 624-1661.

Surprises (we can't tell you about those) are included in the $50 per person ticket price. Tickets must be reserved in advance by writing the Studio Theatre, Box 3591, Carmel, 93921, or calling 624-1661.

At Old Monterey Music Hall, there is a party for kids younger than 21 and another just for those older than 21. And believe it or not, they will be giving away money. The 6 p.m. show is open to children of all ages. For $7.50 at the door, celebrants can dance to the music of Trendex. Party favors will be distributed to all. Albums, posters, cash prizes ($100 first prize) will be given to the lucky few.

For the big kids the party starts at 9:30 p.m. Everyone will receive a bottle of champagne and party favors for the $12.50 ticket price. Music will be provided by The Medflys. The Old Monterey Music Hall is located at 425 Washington St., Monterey. For more information, call 373-8770.

The folks at Mission Ranch will whoop it up around the piano bar New Year's Eve. Besides the tinkling of the ivories, there will be party hats, favors and food. Mission Ranch is located on Dolores Street near Carmel Mission. For information, call 624-6436 or 624-3824.

"The usual New Year's Eve party" — says a spokesman for Hog's Breath Inn, will start 1984 rolling at this Carmel watering hole. Balloons and noisemakers will add to the party atmosphere, and full menu will be served in the restaurant. Hog's Breath Inn is located at San Carlos and Fifth. For further information, call 625-1044.

An elegant seven course dinner is in the offing New Year's Eve at Sans Souci, on Lincoln street between Fifth and Sixth avenues in Carmel. The menu consists of cream of wild mushroom soup, lobster and truffle mousse en papillotte au beurre blanc, ballotine of poussin, lemon sherbet, veal michele, salad of spinach and Belgian endive, white chocolate

'To Be...' should not have been

By MICHAEL GARDNER

To Be or Not to Be*. With Mel Brooks and Anne Bancroft. Directed by Alan Johnson. Produced by Mel Brooks. A Brooksfilm released by 20th Century Fox. Rated PG for some adult subject matter. A little profanity, no nudity, no violence.

(An open letter to Mel Brooks)

Dear Mel:

I'm really sorry to tell you this, what with the holidays and all. But, Mel, the simple truth is you're just not funny anymore.

I just returned from that gawd-awful To Be or Not To Be that produced a handful of laughs despite the outstanding cast of your real-life wife Anne Bancroft, Jose Ferrer and Tim Matheson.

I really was hoping that by giving us another chance together, we could make things work out. We had our problems with Silent Movie and The History of the World — Part 1, but I really thought that To Be or Not to Be would rekindle the old belly laughs which were once your trademark and which now seem only a memory.

I'm your friend Mel. If friends can't tell you, who can? I mean, what's so funny about parentheses?

One of your scenes has Bancroft as the actress-singer Anna Bronski complaining about second billing to you, Frederick Bronski, owner of the famous Bronski Theater Company in Warsaw, during the early days of World War II.

Ms. Bancroft turns to you in a fit and says: "I don't mind being under the title but putting my name in parentheses?" Then you turn to her and say: "But they set your name apart" and there is a long pause for audience laughter. I think I heard a giggle or two, but that may have been the popcorn machine overflowing.

Mel, you even struck out with the fag jokes. I mean, homosexuality is a funny topic and you had free rein because in Poland of 1942 you could call these people fags and play them swishy without any twinge of conscience.

Take the scene where you're complaining about Nazi censorship. The Germans have just told you that the show could no longer feature gypsy numbers. You bitterly complain: "Without Jews, fags and gypsies there is no theater."

Is that so funny? C'mon Mel. You can do better than that. I mean, really, don't expect me to think you're making a modern-day parable in one sentence about how the entertainment biz can no longer poke fun at minorities?

AFTER ALL, look at the latest films where the black character is funny (Eddie Murphy in Changing Places). Hollywood has even gone drag with Tootsie, Yentl and Victor/Victoria. So don't try to feed us that line about that's why you're no longer funny.

Mel, it really hurts me to break off our long friendship. It reminds me of a recent parting of friends. Remember Steve Martin, that wild and crazy guy we'd stay up so late with on Saturday nights? I don't know if you hear from him lately, but things have been just as tough for our old friend.

After some success, Steve disappointed me in a series of films such as The Jerk, Dead Men Don't Wear Plaid, and The Man With Two Brains. For a while, I thought he had it going for him once again with Pennies From Heaven, but alas he did not have the courage to overcome the lukewarm reaction to his experimental and very entertaining musical.

Mel, remember the good old days when we first met? You remember, you were a writer for that old classic television comedy Get Smart with Don Adams. You used to be so good and it was little wonder that before we knew each other you wrote for Sid Caesar and Your Show of Shows.

I quickly became infatuated with the quick laugh, the slapstick and the satire that became your trademark through the years.

And then how you progressed. I remember sitting in the theater and laughing at your unique humor in still classics such as Blazing Saddles, High Anxiety, and Young Frankenstein.

But frankly, Mel, you're in a slump. I watched and endured the slow deterioriation of our romance in Silent Movie and History of the World — Part 1.

And now, To Be or Not to Be is just the last straw. I gave you another chance. I went with you in To Be or Not to Be just for the laughs. But Mel, it didn't rekindle the old flame. The funny is gone and all that is left is your name on the billboard.

A person can only take so much disappointment. I guess I'm fickle, but if you ever want to find me, I'll be hanging out with Aykroyd, Murphy and Pryor.

Sincerely,
Mike

What's playing at the movies

Christine: A cherried-out Plymouth turns red with fury as teenage bad boys go on the prowl. Based on the Stephen King best seller and directed by John Carpenter. Gorky Park: Three bodies are discovered in Moscow's famed Gorky Park. As detective Arkady Renko, William Hurt must find the brutal killer. Also starring Lee Marvin, Joanna Pacula, Brian Dennehy and Ian Bannen. Based on the best seller by Martin Cruz Smith. Rated R. At the Hill Theatre.

Mickey's Christmas Carol: Following a 30-year absence from the big screen, Mickey appears as Bob Cratchit, the overworked, underpaid employee of Ebenezer Scrooge, played by Scrooge McDuck. Adapted from the Dickens classic, Donald Duck is Nephew Fred in this animated featurette from the Disney people. Music by Irwin Kostal. Rated G. At the Dream Theater.

The Rescuers: a 1977 animated feature from the Disney people about the efforts of a "mice squad" to find a kidnapped orphan. Voice talents include Bob Newhart and Eva Gabor. Rated G. At the Dream Theater.

Rocky Horror Picture Show: In this cult classic, an engaged couple, Brad and Janet, meet Dr. Frankenfurter, a transvestite/transsexual, and learn to Time Warp. Stars Tim Curry, Susan Sarandon, Barry Bostwick, Little Nell and Patricia Quinn. Richard O'Brien wrote the music and portrays the hunchback assistant. Rated R. At the Dream Theater.

Scarface: Desperate to make it to the top in America once he has safely joined the 1980 exodus from Castro's Cuba, ex-con Tony Montana gets there the only way he knows how — by clawing his way up the junkpile of Miami's thriving drug business. An update of the 1932 gangster film, stars Robert DeNiro as the hood. Brian De Palma directed. Violence and raw language go with the turf. Rated R. At the Regency Theatre.

Silkwood: Meryl Streep's first role since her Academy Award-winning performance in Sophie's Choice. Streep portrays Karen Silkwood, who died in 1974 in a mysterious car crash while she was attempting to expose the dangers in the plutonium plant where she worked. Co-stars Kurt Russell and Cher. Directed by Mike Nichols, from an original screenplay by Nora Ephron and Alice Arlen. Rated R. At Cinema 70.

Sudden Impact: Dirty Harry is at it again! Actor-director Clint Eastwood brings back the tough cop, who surfaces in a thriller filmed in San Francisco and Santa Cruz. Also features Sondra Locke, Pat Hingle and Bradford Dillman. Rated R. At the Golden Bough Theatre.

Terms of Endearment: is a comedy with dramatic cadences that explores the complex, honest and joyous evolvement of the relationship between a mother and daughter over the course of 30 years. Debra Winger is Emma Greenway Horton, Shirley Maclaine is Aurora Greenway, Jack Nicholson is the Greenways' next-door neighbor, former American astronaut Garrett Breedlove, Danny DeVito is Aurora's longtime suitor, Jeff Daniels is the man Emma decides to marry and John Lithgow befriends Emma. Rated PG. At the Crossroads Cinema.

To Be or Not to Be: Mel Brooks and Ann Bancroft as members of the Bronski Theatrical Troupe, which becomes involved in an outrageous sceme to save the Polish underground during World War II. Also stars Tim Matheson, Charles Durning and Jose Ferrer. Rated PG. At the Crossroads Cinema.

Two of a Kind: John Travolta and Olivia Newton-John are cinematically re-united in a romantic comedy about a pair of star-matched lovers in whose unlikely hands rests the fate of the world. Co-stars Charles Durning, Oliver Reed, Beatrice Straight, Scatman Crothers and Castulo Guerra. Rated PG. At the State Three Cinemas.

Uncommon Valor: Gene Hackman portrays Colonel Jason Rhodes, a man obsessed with locating his son, who was listed as missing in action in Vietnam more than 10 years before. Also features Robert Stack, Reb Brown, Randall Cobb, Patrick Swayze and Harold Sylvester. Rated R. At the State Three Cinemas.

Yentl: Barbra Streisand co-wrote, produced and directed this star vehicle. Based on a story by Isaac Bashevis Singer, Streisand portrays a young Jewish woman who disguises herself as a man in order to attend studies forbidden to women in 1904. Mandy Patinkin plays Avigdor, the young man she secretly loves, and Amy Irving is the woman Yentl "marries" in order to remain close to Avigdor. Rated PG. At the Carmel Village Theatre.

THIRTY-ONE tour titleists continue competition through Saturday in the 12th annual Spalding Invitational Pro-Am. The tournament is the traditional kick-off for the new golf year. This year the Spalding is being played on the Old Del Monte, Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club and Pebble Beach courses. For ticket information, call the Spalding Pro-Am office, 649-6828. Top golfers challenge local links in Spalding— a preview for Crosby clambake hopefuls

SEVERAL of golf's biggest names are testing the rigors of three Monterey Peninsula courses as the twelfth edition of the Spalding Invitational Pro-Am continues through Saturday.

Winner of 19 European titles and the 1981 Canadian Open, Britisher Peter Oosterhuis defends his title in the $150,000 event. The new tour year begins over the Old Del Monte, Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club and Pebble Beach courses.

"Like everyone else, I've been using the Spalding as a tune-up for the tour," Oosterhuis said after he won his first tournament in the United States. "But the purse has grown so and the field is so strong you can hardly consider this a tune-up anymore."

Among the scheduled players are Johnny Miller, Craig Stadler and Al Geiberger, a former Spalding winner. They will be joined by PGA Tour winners Bob Gilder, Rex Caldwell, George Burns, Andy North, Larry Mize, Mark Lye, Lon Hinkle and former Spalding winners John Mahaffey and Bobby Clampett.

"We've always had a good field, but this year it looks like we'll have an outstanding field," said tournament founder and director Harold Firstman.

Tournament winners from the 1983 LPGA Tour expected to play in the Spalding include LPGA Player of the Year Patty Sheehan, a four-time winner this year.

The Spalding is the only tournament in the United States which features head-to-head play among LPGA and PGA stars for equal prize money. Joining Sheehan as LPGA representatives will be three-time U.S. Women's Amateur champion Julie Inkster, who won the Safeco Classic in her brief two months on the tour; Janet Coles, who won this year's Lady Michelob and Lauren Howe, the Mayflower champion. Howe will be making her debut in the Spalding.

Proceeds from the Spalding are annually turned over to the Monterey Kiwanis Club for use in youth-oriented charity programs.

Gallery tickets are available at all Monterey Peninsula golf shops. Ticket information is also available by calling the Spalding Pro-Am office in Carmel at 649-6828.

How to enjoy holiday season

By FAMILY SERVICE AGENCY

'WHAT DO you need to do to have a joyful holiday celebration?"

The client who asked this question faced her second holiday season as a single parent. Her divorce, which she didn't want, was final six months ago. She and her daughter had spent the last holiday season in a miserable depression and state of anger.

As is always the case, divorce or the death of a loved one puts a dreadful depression into our lives. The sadness of the first or second year after such a traumatic event makes us wonder if we will ever again know the joy of the season. I stated that nothing could make her life the way it used to be, but there were things she could do to move ahead and experience some new joy during the coming holidays.

I shared with her the combination of "things to do" and "things to avoid" that seem to improve the quality and the joyfulness of the new year. First, the "things to do" list:

- Plan to celebrate: make dates with friends and family members, visit with them or go to lunch or dinner, or on a holiday trip if possible.
- Plan or help to plan parties with the people at work, church or in your clubs. Be sure music you can sing is planned.
- Schedule to attend a concert or a play in your community or in a nearby city.
- Most important: Have a positive attitude. Look at what you have rather than at what you don't have. Think about the good things, the good times and the good people in your life. Counting our blessings leads to happiness, thankfulness, gratitude and contentment.
- Finally, plan to attend a service of worship in which you can particpate in singing, praising and praying.

This list is only limited by one's imagination. Planning and a good attitude can hangle most of the problems people experience around the holidays.

Next, the "things to avoid" list'

- Failing to make plans to be with family and friends to do fun things.
- Maintaining a negative attitude.
- Over-drinking.
- Over-eating.
- Over-spending.
- Lack of sleep.

These are the things that create trouble and problems for people at the holidays.

My client returned this week and said she and her daughter had had a wonderful start of the holidays. They had planned a trip to visit relatives in the San Francisco Bay Area for the holidays. Before she was to leave on Friday, she had also made plans with two of her office friends for a small party on New Year's Eve. They expected several other friends to join them and share in the preparation, expense and fun of the evening.

Her attitude was positive and she was excited about the control she realized she had over her life. I asked her if she felt any joy return into her life. She said she was feeling more joyous with each passing day. Joy was beginning to be a part of her daily life, because of what she was choosing to do.

Joy is one of the richest, deepest and most meaningful feelings we can have. Even the spiritual quality of life is expressed by the presence of this feeling of joy. The great Jesuit theologian and scientist, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin, (1881-1955), claimed that joy was the clearest mark of the presence of the spirit of God.

In light of that spirit, it is a fact that joy is found in the act of giving. Joy is created and shared in the act of giving gifts, which we do at this holiday season. But most importantly, joy is created and shared in the giving of the gift of ourselves to others.

May you have an exceptionally joy-filled holiday season and new year!

Backgammon

Accept or resign?

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

You, White, are on roll in the diagrammed position. Should you double? If you do, should Black accept or resign?

You should double because you have a very fine position which could go sour after a bad roll or two. If you fail to double and get a good roll or two, it will be too late to double since Black won't dream of taking and you'll lose your market.

Your good rolls are any six, any one, 4-2, 3-3 and 2-2, since they enable you to make your bar point. Even if you fail to make your bar point, Black is less than even money to hit the blot; and if he does hit the blot, he is not out of the woods.

At this moment you're a strong favorite to win the game, but since you're no favorite to win a gammon you don't give up much if your double forces Black to resign. If Black takes the double, hold your breath and roll carefully: you don't want 5-5 or 4-4, and you certainly don't want a succession of such rolls.

Since there are so few really bad rolls for you, and so many good rolls, Black should resign. Even if you are just playing for peanuts, it's a waste of good peanuts to take doubles like this.

Would you like to have Alfred Sheinwold teach you how to play backgammon? A 12-lesson booklet will be on the way to you when you send $1 plus a stamped, self-addressed, No. 10 envelope to Backgammon, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1000, Los Angeles, Calif. 90053.

Catching up with the symphony

By SCOTT MACCLELLAND

THOMAS CONLIN has been engaged to conduct the Monterey County Symphony concert on Feb. 26, 27 and 28.

Originally Conlin was to have directed the orchestra during the 1984-85 season as one of several candidates for the position of music director following the retirement of Haymo Taeuber. Due to conflicts in Conlin's schedule next year, his concerts this season will constitute his audition.

Conlin is thus the first announced candidate for the position Taeuber has held for 15 years, and though his selection for consideration reflects a substantial search that began with Taeuber's announcement to leave the orchestra, his credentials on paper cannot be seen as overly impressive.

The orchestra he has headed since 1975, the Amarillo Symphony, announced a search for a new music director this past summer. With a budget of $450,000, roughly $100,000 larger than that of the Monterey Symphony, the Amarillo orchestra performs significantly more services, including a great many more school concerts and an annual collaboration with the Lone Star Ballet for The Nutcracker, and performances with a local choral society.

Were the decision to leave such a post entirely his own, a move to Monterey could not be viewed as a step up if Conlin's career is advancing. His record of guest spots with orchestras in Charleston, W. Va., Baltimore, Calgary and Tuscon give an inconclusive picture, but, as the Monterey Symphony has announced, he conducted La Traviata at the Bear Valley Festival last summer, "to critical acclaim." The Bear Valley Festival is regularly attended by players from the Monterey Symphony, including flutist Ray Fabrizio who sits on the orchestra's search panel.

In accepting the need to switch seasons, Taeuber will take Conlin's concert in the 1984-85 lineup, and, not surprisingly, programs will be juggled accordingly. The only thing remaining in the original February program is the Dvorak Cello Concerto with its soloist, David Geringas.

As this was not of Conlin's choosing it could prove the most revealing of his skills. Of his choosing, and filling out the program, are Bernstein's Candide Overture, Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis of Themes of Weber, and Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet.

In his Jan. 29, 30 and 31 concerts, Taeuber has replaced his original program, except for the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 27 with Walter Klien, with Barber's Adagio for Strings and the Beethoven Symphony No. 4, both originally scheduled for February. Previously he had been unable to secure parts for the Franz Schmidt Symphony No. 4, planned for January, and had substituted a Mendelssohn symphony.

On stage

Studio Theatre Restaurant: continues with the comedy by Sam and Bella Spewak, My Three Angels with dinner served at 7 p.m. and curtain at 8:30 p.m. Thursday through Saturday, Dec. 29, 30 and 31. The theater is on Dolores Street near Ocean Avenue in Carmel.

The story relates how three badmen — convicts, in fact — became the good angels of a sadly harassed household. The scene is French Guiana, a region where on Christmas Day the temperature drops back to 104 degrees and where convicts can get hired out and not have to report back.

The play stars George Flansburg and Rene Hoffman as Felix and Emilie Ducotel. Their daughter, Marie Louise, is played by Robin Black. The three convicts are Ted Elisee, Tim Sindt and Robert Gregory. Madame Parole is played by Alison Faul. Also in the cast are Scott Mattraw and Jonathan Seydel. Don Nyman appears as the Lieutenant.

Cost of the dinner and show on Thursday and Friday is $22.50. A limited number of seats are available at $10 for the show only. For reservations, phone 624-1661.

On New Year's Eve, Saturday, Dec. 31, the Studio Theatre Restaurant will present Extravaganza. In addition to the closing performance of My Three Angels, Extravaganza will feature a roast duckling cassis and wild rice dinner, complimentary champagne and a show by San Francisco comedienne Constance Fisher.

Tickets to Extravaganza are $50 per person. Call for reservations.

The next production at the Studio will be Neil Simon's Plaza Suite, which opens Jan. 13.

The Wharf Theater: continues with the Gilbert and Sullivan operatic comedy, H.M.S. Pinafore at 8:30 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 31 and 8 p.m. Sunday, Jan. 1 on Old Fisherman's Wharf, Monterey.

The crew of the Pinafore includes Harrison Shields as Captain Corcoran, Mike Romero as Ralph Rackstraw and John Newkirk as Dick Deadeye. Inspecting the ship is Jim Jensen as Sir Joseph Porter and his female relatives Candis Hess as Josephine and Leila Knight as Cousin Hebe.

Bumboat Woman Katie Leonard will sell her wares as Little Buttercup. Other sailors and relatives include Kelley Alexander, Robert Basgall, Sherie Gibbons, Julie Graham, Susan Mayber, John Nahas, Suzanne Sammut and Bryan Sanderson.

Ticket prices are $6 and $8. For reservations, phone 372-2882.

PROVIDENCE WAS KIND INDEED

All Carmel is in a praverful state of mind — and should be so. Considering the nature of last Saturday's automobile accident at Hairpin Bend, on the highway between Carmel and Monterey, it is nothing less than a miracle that a number of our residents were not killed outright. It might have been that instead of a joyful Christmas, we should have had a very sad one.

In the many years that Fred M. Wermuth has transported passengers over the Carmel Hill, this is the only serious accident he has had.

In backing the heavy machine, in order to pick up a package of papers near the embankment, no one seemed to realize that the ground had been made very soft by the rain of the night before, and while the weight of the car and its 12 passengers was on solid, level ground, the rear end gradually sunk, slipped over the embankment, and turned completely over.

All those who were injured — none seriously — are recovering.

It is said that the Railroad Commission will institute an inquiry concerning the accident.

NO CHRISTMAS TREE

The absence of the Ocean Avenue Christmas tree was noted by residents and visitors to the village, who missed its glowing cheer at the head of the business district. The neglect was in the nature of an oversight, it is claimed.

MAYOR STOPS GRADING ON OCEAN AVENUE AT NORMANDY INN

Work has stopped on street grading in front of the Normandy Inn Wednesday morning by order of Mayor John Chitwood and Street Commissioner Jim Buffington.

Robert Stanton had been given informal permission by city council members to black-top the street area in front of his property which is used for parking. Stanton agreed to pay the cost, and hired a contractor.

Citizens seeing the grading work starting Wednesday morning phoned the mayor and street commissioner, complaining that the matter had never come publicly before the council either on tree tour or at a regular meeting, as required by ordinance. Mayor and street commissioner, realizing the snafu, ordered the work stopped and put the matter on the agenda for the Jan. 7 city council meeting.

Involved is the south side of Ocean Avenue between Monte Verde and Casanova streets. From there to the beach a 30-foot wide paved street runs down the center of 100 foot wide Ocean Avenue. There are different schools of thought on whether the unpaved portion should be saved for landscaping or black topped for parking. The area in front of the Normandy Inn is used for parking, though unpaved.

PEACOCKS VERBOTEN!

A peacock was busted last week in Carmel.

At all started when operators of the Holiday Guest House on Camino Real, Frans Hollander and Nikko French, approached their neighbor Fran Gorey and asked, "You saw a peacock, maybe, go by here?"

In time it was discovered the wayward peacock had been arrested and taken into custody by the Animal Control people.

Dogs and cats are permitted, but peacocks are "verboten" within the village limits.

WILL CARMEL VALLEY BE "GILDED GHETTO"?

Carmel Valley is growing old.

Events are conspiring to push younger families out of the Valley. If you ask people who live there, they say they would prefer to have a diverse community which has everything from nursery schools to nursing home.

Events point in a different direction. Consider these facts, for instance:

• The average price of a house in Carmel and Carmel Vally has virtually doubled since 1975, according to figures provided both by the Carmel Board of Realtors and Monterey Savings and Loan, the area's largest mortgage lender. Prices of homes sold from September 1977 to September 1978 increased by more than 50 percent.

• The average age of homebuyers is rising as prices increase. In 1975, buyers averaged 55 years of age. At the end of 1977, the average age was 57.5 years.

• Enrollment at both Carmel Valley elementary schools has declined in the last four years while total population for the area rose. The 13 percent gain in population stands in contrast to the 12 percent decline in school enrollment for the period. Carmel school district officials have discussed the possibility of closing Carmelo School at Mid-Valley if the decline continues.

Grant available from Friends of Photography

The Friends of Photography has announced that guidelines for the 1984 Ferguson Grant and the 1984 Ruttenberg Fellowship are now available.

Applications for the Ferguson Grant will be accepted between April 1 and April 15, 1984. Applications for the Ruttenberg Fellowship will be accepted between June 1 and June 15.

A copy of the guidelines for both awards and specific requirements for shipping and packing may be obtained by writing to Grants, The Friends of Photography, P.O. Box 500, Carmel, Calif. 93921. A stamped, self-addressed envelope must be included with all requests.

The Ferguson Grant is a $2,000 cash award presented each year by The Friends of Photography to a photographer who has demonstrated excellence in and commitment to the field of creative photography. It is the purpose of the grant to assist in the professional and artistic growth of the recipient.

The Ruttenberg Fellowship, initiated in 1982, is designed to support a specific photographic project and to assist in the creative development of the recipient. The $2,000 cash award was established through a grant from the Ruttenberg Arts Foundation of Chicago. The Ruttenberg Fellowship has previously been presented to Tom Millea (1982) and Jim Goldberg (1983).

Qualifications for the Ferguson Grant and Ruttenberg Fellowship have not been specifically defined, although it is expected that each grant recipient will have demonstrated a certain level of excellence

Wine Watch

Poor '83 harvest: possible blessing?

By JIM JOHNSON
Central Coast Wine Tours

THE MESSAGE from Monterey County vintners concerning 1983 is upbeat.

That the American way of business still exists is exciting for Dan Lee, co-owner of Morgan Winery. After he served an apprenticeship at Jekel for several years as wine maker, Dan Lee and Donna George released their first Chardonnay under the Morgan marquee.

"Serendipity best describes 1983 for the Morgan Winery," Lee said. "How do you describe the year in which your first wine gathers gold medals at the Los Angeles Wine Festival, the L.A. County Fair and then wins the American Wine Competition?"

Exciting is Almaden's performance in major competitions. According to Faith Graves of Almaden: "Almaden won 40 awards in nine major open competitions including an Oscar for their 1979 Cabernet from Vin Expo in France for best USA entry."

For Roy Thomas of Monterey Peninsula Winery, 1983 was another exciting and interesting year. "We at Monterey Peninsula Winery found it to be sweet and sour. Sweet in that for the second year in a row, we were given the top honors for our 1980 Monterey Cabernet. A double gold and best in show in San Francisco, as well as a Gold Medal for top price range at Orange County," Thomas said. The year was sour in that rot damage created by heavy rain produced a disappointing harvest.

For Kathy Eyerman of Carmel Bay Winery, the year was encouraging in that "restaurants and retail stores are more willing to carry a small wineries' premium wine because greater public awareness demands a wider selection of local wines."

Jerry McFarland, president of Smith and Hook, reiterated Roy Thomas' concern for the 1983 crop. "The 1983 crop in California was short, in the order of 30 percent under 1982. Rain caused some quality problems on the California coast, including Monterey," McFarland said.

Concern was also registered by Monterey County's most decorated premium vintner for 1983, Doug Meador of Ventana Vineyards. (A summary of 1983 Monterey County Wine Awards follows.) Of equal concern to the harvest for Meadow was a consumer "movement contrary to the direction of Monterey's quality direction of the last decade. Marketing point price pressure created by foreign government-subsidized wines of lesser quality is leading to major price cutting," Meador said. He questioned why agreements to prevent dumping in the U.S. by foreign governments were not being enforced in 1983.

Consistent with Doug Meador's price observations is the successful year Turgeon and Lohr (J. Lohr) Winery experienced. Jerry Turgeon said "J. Lohr experienced record growth as we added more French cooperage and refrigerated stainless for added fermentation capacity. Maritime storms also influenced the harvesting techniques and timing of our Greenfield Vineyards for the second year in a row."

WITH AN abundance of exceptional 1982 vintage available, the poor harvest in 1983 could be a blessing.

Value-oriented premium producers such as J. Lohr are posting profitable gains. And one point that only Kathy Eyerman of Carmel Bay Winery touched upon which I am going to explore: the demand, created by increased local preference and public awareness of our local wine industry.

In 1983, a Wine Docents Council similar to one in Napa Valley was created which consisted of prolific ladies committed to accelerating awareness of the industry image. My vote for the true friend of the local wine award for 1983 goes to Karen Silliman, past chairwoman of the Monterey County Wine and Food Festival. Despite controversy, Karen's efforts over the past two years have far surpassed the efforts of others to increase awareness of the Monterey County wine industry. Congratulations Karen, and an exciting 1984 to all.

A STEAL AT $300,000
This home was appraised in May at $375,000 and now is priced $300,000. It's a steal for the smart buyer who wants to live in Carmel Valley. Located only 4½ miles from Highway 1, this home is situated on 1.68 acres. It has a large lawn area that is enhanced with a number of flowers and shrubs. It has several brick patios, a green house, deck and a regulation size tennis court. There is also a swimming pool with solar assisted heating system, a spa and free water rights. The five bedroom, three bath house is loaded with extras and has over 3000 square feet of living area.

PRICE HAS BEEN REDUCED
The owner is anxious to sell this two bedroom, two bath house near Carmel Beach. It has a large, well-landscaped yard completely fenced and its name, "Yellow Oak," is just part of its charm. It has a large living room with fireplace, modern and fully equipped kitchen, laundry room and plenty of storage space. Priced at only $210,000, this lovely home is the best buy in its neighborhood.

EXCLUSIVE LA RANCHERIA LOCATION
A lovely two bedroom, two bath country estate nestled among mature oaks on nearly two acres in the La Rancheria section of Carmel Valley. The country-style home offers a large living room, modern kitchen, open beam ceilings, fireplace, large deck, hot tub and swimming pool. The owner has kept this home in good shape and it shows. Two car garage. Priced to sell at $375,000.

NEW LISTING – GOOD BUY IN CARMEL
This two bedroom, two bath home near Carmel village has just been put on the market. It has over 1100 square feet of living area with large living room, modern kitchen, sun porch, lots of closets and storage space. Other features include a large single car garage, redwood interior and the backyard has been fully landscaped with outdoor lighting and stepping stones. It has a nice back deck accessible from the master bedroom or the sunporch and is priced for quick sale at only $198,500.

ROOM TO EXPAND
There is room to expand on this 100 by 100 square foot-lot in Hatton Fields. The existing home is well built and contains 1,200 square feet of living space. It has two bedrooms and two baths with new carpets and custom drapes. The owners have just put in a new furnace and new water heater. Other features include open-beam ceiling, wood-burning fireplace, covered patio and double car garage. The price is right, too, at only $154,500.

YOUNG DANCERS will congregate for a fortnight master class July 30 through Aug. 12, 1984, at Hidden Valley Music Seminars in Carmel Valley. Events of the coming season are traditionally announced at the Hidden Valley new year's eve party.

A New Year's celebration with Hidden Valley opera

A COLLECTION of George Gershwin and Cole Porter melodies presented by the Hidden Valley Opera Ensemble will highlight the annual new year's eve celebration at Hidden Valley Music Seminars.

The party begins at 9 p.m. at the theater, located off Carmel Valley Road near Ford Road, Carmel Valley.

Tickets to the benefit are priced at $42.50 per person. Of that amount, $25 is tax deductible. In addition to songs and music, the evening will include dancing, desserts and open bar.

The schedule of events for the coming season at Hidden Valley is traditionally announced at this occasion.

According to Peter Meckel, founder and general director of Hidden Valley, a variety of seminars and performances will punctuate the coming season. On alternate years an opera is mounted at the theater, and in the fall of 1984 Hidden Valley will stage both Of Mice and Men by Carlisle Floyd and Candide by Leonard Bernstein.

Other 1984 events will include a vocal master class taught by Elisabeth Schwarzkopf Jan. 21 through 27, with a class recital scheduled for the last day of the course.

The Master's Festival of Chamber Music is slated for June 27 through July 1, 1984. Participants should include principal players of the New York Philharmonic, Boston Symphony, Los Angeles Philharmonic and Minnesota orchestras.

Masters classes scheduled for the summer — June 4 through July 15 — will be taught by New York Philharmonic members Glenn Dicterow, concert master, and Lorne Munro, principal cellist. Julius Baker, flutist, and Charles Schlueter, principal trumpet player of the Boston Symphony, will also lead master classes, Meckel said.

As in previous years the dance fortnight master class will be conducted during the summer. In 1984, dancers will meet July 30 through Aug. 12. The summer music seminar for high school age students will run from Aug. 13 thrugh 31.

To celebrate the start of the 21st year of Hidden Valley Music Seminars, call the theater at 659-3115.

Transforming marble into art

'IT'S ALREADY in there — all I do is knock away what isn't."

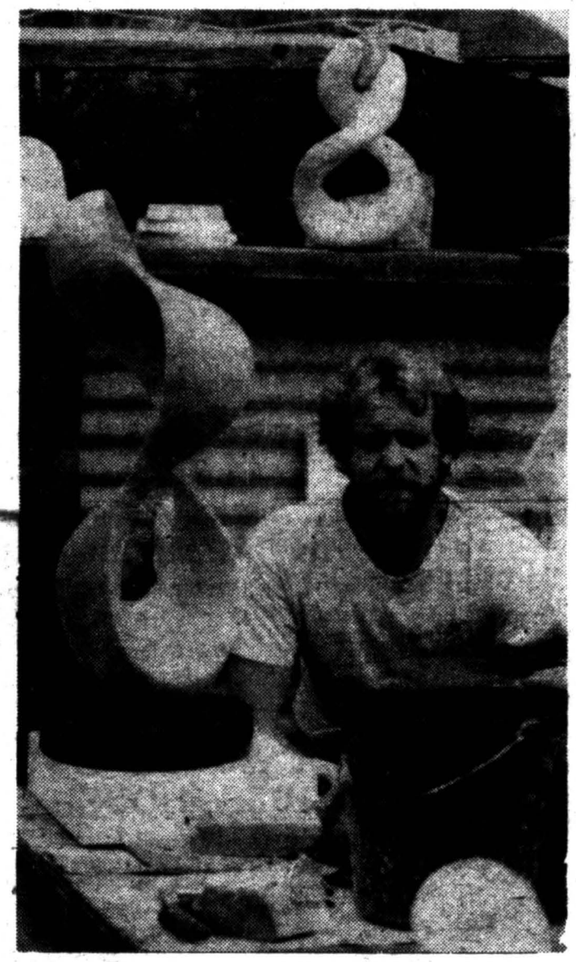
This statement summarizes sculptor T Barny's explanation of how he transforms a 350-pound hunk of marble into a 35-pound work of art.

Barny addressed a group at the Dec. 16 slide show-and-tell Salon d'Art in Landell Galleries, 9 Del Dono Court, Carmel. The California sculptor also discussed his reverse evolution from avant garde sculptures in neon, bent pipe and aluminum to the classical techniques of Greek and Renaissance sculptors. His newest abstractions are composed in marble, wood and bronze.

As Michelangelo did before he carved the David, Barny studies his raw marble pieces for weeks or even months. He seeks out flaws and discovers what needs to be eliminated to "release" the form which already "exists" in the stone.

To describe his sensual, sinuous, highly polished works, he writes: "I carve out the flaws to release a sound, free form inherent in the specific block . . . unhindered by preconceptions of design, the noble substance reciprocates my love and respect through the life which has emerged. These forms invoke a sense of universal beauty through archetypal continuous curves, yet not primitive because they have been technically resolved."

With a grin, he adds: "The best kind of art is when it twists your mind a little bit."



T BARNY at work in the carving area of his studio in Mountain View. Barny's sculptures are displayed at Landell Galleries, 9 Del Dono Court, Carmel.
